Roosevelt May Ask Congress to Repeal Entire Neutrality Law

By William V. Neusly.

President Roosevelt last night was preparing for the extra session of Congress, opening tomorrow, a message expected in many circles to call for repeal of the present neutrality law, to be followed by enactment of important portions of the Administration's six-point program to keep this country out of war.

The proposals to be made will be discussed by the President at the extraordinary White House conference this afternoon to which he has invited legislative and political leaders of both parties.

Some sources forecast that the Chief Executive would accept flat repeal of the present act in order to attain his primary goal of putting an end to the mandatory arms embargo, and they pointed to a statement by Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, bitter isolationist, that he might prefer repeal of the entire law to some of the proposals being heard.

They cited, also, the possibility that in his long-distance conversations with members of Congress, Mr. Roosevelt may have reached a conclusion that a majority would accept the simpler maneuver of repeal in preference to the more involved and probably more difficult legislative undertaking of revision of the law.

Would Avoid Disunity Impression

In view of the sharp attacks by Borah and other isolationist Senators on the President's foreign policy, it was considered likely by these sources that the President would call for outright repeal of the existing law, in hope of avoiding the long drawn out legislative battle that he has feared would create an impression abroad that the country is badly split on the neutrality issue.

On the other hand, some official circles doubted that the President was prepared to abandon entirely the six-point program which Secretary of State Hull has said is "best calculated to keep this Nation out of war."

The Secretary said even as recently as yesterday that the program still is fundamentally unchanged.

It called for prohibiting American ships from combat zones, restricting travel by Americans in such areas, requiring transfer of title to all goods purchased here by a belligerent before shipment, continuing restrictions on loans and credits to combatant nations, regulating collection of funds here for use in belligerent countries, and continuing the munitions control board and the system of export licenses for munitions.

No Politics, Republican Vows

Complete dropping of this program by the Administration, it was said, was hardly to be expected, since practically all of the points were designed to lessen the likelihood of incidents that would tend to involve this country in hostilities. However, return to international law, without any restrictive or mandatory neutrality legislation, it was pointed out, would restore to the President broad powers to deal with various situations as they arose.

Mr. Roosevelt will deliver his message in person at 2 p. m. tomorrow under present tentative plans. He declined at his press conference yesterday to give any hint of its contents, but said it would be comparatively short.

He said that changes in what he terms the so-called neutrality law will be discussed at today's conference, which will be attended by former Gov. Alf M. Landon and Col. Frank Knox, Republican standard-bearers in 1936, as well as leaders of both parties in both houses.

As more and more members of Senate and House reached the Capital during the day, a member of the Republican board of legislative strategy was reported by the International News Service to have said the Republican representation at the President's meeting will treat the arms embargo repeal as a nonpartisan issue.

He said:

"The feeling in our ranks is that since parties are split on repealing

The War Today

BRITAIN AND FRANCE sharply denounced Fuehrer Hitler's speech with renewed assertions of determination to reject any Nazi-dictated peace.

HITLER CHALLENGED Britain and France with a claim Germany was ready for seven years of war but said he had "no war aims" against them. Partial text—Page 11.

FRANCE DISPLAYED fear of a German attack through Belgium—as in 1914; two German attacks on the Moselle-Rhine front were said to have been repulsed.

SOVIET RUSSIA'S reported blockade of Estonia threw new fears into the small eastern Baltic states.

NAZI SUBMARINES continued depredations on British shipping, as Britain announced 378 missing of the H. M. S. Courageous crew.

GERMANS CLAIMED capture of 50,000 Polish prisoners west of Warsaw; 2,000 to 3,000 Poles still held out near Gdynia.

WARSAW'S RADIO said the city still held out under terrific bombardment; maps circulated in Rumania purported to show planned boundaries of the Nazi-envisioned Polish buffer state.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT was drafting his message to Congress calling for an end of the arms embargo; he confers today on neutrality with leaders of both parties.

Congressmen Call for More Men and Arms

But Roosevelt Says Any Further Increase Is in Lap of Gods

By John G. Norris.
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt said yesterday that any further increase in the armed forces of the United States is in the lap of the gods, as returning members of Congress urged expansion of the military establishment.

The Chief Executive made his statement after revealing that no enlargement of the Army and Navy beyond that already ordered is contemplated at the present time. From three influential members of Congressional committees handling defense matters, however, came a call for additional armaments.

Chairman May of the House Military Affairs Committee proposed enlargement of the Army and National Guard to the full peace-time limit and provision for modern weapons and fighting equipment for an Army of 1,000,000 men.

Representative Collins (Democrat) of Mississippi, member and former chairman of the House Army Appropriations sub-committee, declared we need "more planes, fast-moving mechanized forces and good anti-aircraft and anti-tank guns." A member of the same committee, Representative Starnes (Democrat), of Alabama, called for more men and arms and decentralization of the munitions industry.

Starnes declared that next to neutrality, the No. 1 problem of the country is national defense. He urged further mechanization of the Army, and expansion of the Regular Army to 280,000 and the National Guard to 440,000 men. With reserves, he stated, this would bring our armed strength to about 1,000,000 men. He proposed that munitions plants be established between the Eastern and Western mountain ranges as protection against bombers.

Chairman May said he understood the Army and Navy will ask an ad-

Balkans Next Danger Point, Rome Fears

Concerned by Hitler's Lack of Promises, Italy Sees No Hope of Peace

By Herbert L. Matthews.
Copyright by New York Times.

Rome, Sept. 19.—Adolf Hitler's speech holds out no hopes of peace, it is felt here, so there is considerable disappointment in Rome tonight.

His references to Italy and Premier Mussolini were noted and will be prominently displayed in tomorrow's newspapers, but it was noted that Hitler never once mentioned the Axis. Moreover, there is some uneasiness at the Fuehrer's failure to make any promises about the Balkans. That is the next danger point, as seen here.

Italy's only consideration since the war started has been to strengthen her neutral position and maintain it against any developments. Hitler's address at least will not affect that. He has not embarrassed Rome by assurances which would do harm; he has not asked for support from Italy, and he has made no threat which might ultimately jeopardize Italian neutrality. Nor is anyone going to mourn the lack of tribute to the Axis.

Not Indifferent to Balkans

It is clear that Italy's plans for the future are not going to be upset by Germany's policies as exposed in Hitler's speech. But if the Fuehrer proves to have designs on Rumania and the Balkans in general, a difficult situation will be created for Rome.

Unofficial quarters believe Germany and Russia will limit their active military co-operation to the occupation of Poland, but this, too, brings its problems for Italy.

Russia appears to be established in Ruthenia, giving her a common frontier with Hungary, Italy's close friend for many years. A more uneasy frontier could hardly be imagined. It would be difficult, indeed, for Italy not to be drawn in—

The Gallup Poll

War Cuts Party Lines as G.O.P. Voters Echo Democratic Views

By Dr. George Gallup,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

Princeton, N. J., Sept. 19.—America's attitude toward the European conflict, as measured in surveys by the American Institute of Public Opinion, cuts sharply across party lines. Democrats and Republicans are so closely akin in sentiment that the chances of fighting the next political campaign chiefly on war issues seem unlikely, unless events radically change the present situation.

Since the outbreak of war, the Institute has polled the Nation on nearly a dozen different issues connected with the war, and has found that the attitude of rank-and-file Republican voters is substantially the same as that of Democratic voters—a condition which contrasts strikingly with party differences over important domestic issues. Politicians peering into the future and wondering to what extent war issues will become party issues are likely to find that so far as the public is concerned politics has in truth been "adjourned," at least for the moment. Thus, Democratic and Republican voters polled in the surveys are in substantial agreement that we should not send our Army and Navy to fight Germany, that American ships should be kept out of war zones, that American citizens should avoid traveling on non-neutral ships, and that a national referendum should be held before America could draft

French Aroused By Report Nazis May Invade Flanders Again

By Walter B. Kerr.
Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

Paris, Sept. 19.—The French government is paying close attention tonight to reports of German military activity in the area around Aachen (Aix-La-Chapelle) on German soil, just east of the Belgian city of Liege.

There are reports of heavy troop concentration in this vicinity, some of the soldiers having been drawn from the Polish front. There also are reports of evacuation of the civilian population.

French military experts are wondering whether there is a German plan for the invasion of Belgium, such as there was in 1914. The possibility is discussed in the military columns of tomorrow's edition of Le Matin.

The newspaper admits the German activity may be part of the German defense of the Siegfried Line, but it argues that Aachen is 150 miles from the French frontier at its nearest point and at least 140 miles from the Siegfried system. At any event, it says, the French general staff is prepared for anything.

Luxemburg Worried

[The British and French commanders, Viscount Gort and Generalissimo Gamelin, met today with their staffs at Amiens, the United Press said, to consider defense against any possible German drive through Belgium.

[The dispatch said it was understood British troops would be assigned to the extension of France's Maginot Line guarding the northern frontier with Belgium.

[There were also reports from Luxemburg that French successes in the Saar Valley have made citizens fearful of a German attack through the small duchy between Germany, Belgium and France.—Editor's note.]

Allies May Invade Too

French reaction to a German invasion of Belgium has long been planned by military authorities. Some years ago it was decided that the Franco-Belgian frontier could be defended by proper fortifications and that a mobile defense system should be organized to meet German troops on Belgian territory.

The idea formed at that time was for French troops, possibly backed by divisions of the British expeditionary force, to move as soon as a German soldier sets a foot on Belgian territory.

All along the frontier mobile munition dumps were organized, with tons of barbed wire, cases of machine guns, ammunition, mobile artillery, sandbags and big sheets of steel. The intention was to rush this stuff forward onto Belgian soil and organize a line of resistance to a German advance.

Today's plan is secret, but it may resemble this plan of five or six years ago.

French Stop Nazi Drive

Paris, Sept. 19 (AP).—Under cover of a heavy artillery barrage, German troops were reported tonight to have struck in the heart of the northern flank on the Western Front and been turned back by French forces.

The German armies, with victory over Poland on the Eastern Front virtually complete, took the initiative against the French in the west.

The French general staff's communique said the Germans' "partial attack" was met and turned back during the night east of the Saar River. It was the first major attack by Germany on the Western Front since Soviet Russia invaded Poland Sunday, helping German frontal assaults to crush France's eastern ally.

The French general staff's evening communique described the place where another German attack had been turned back as "east of the Blies River."

Swiss Report French Gain

The Blies River is 11 miles east of Saarbruecken and flows northeastward from near the French town of Sarreguemines toward the German town of Blieskastel. Paralleling it about 4 miles distant is the Bickenalbe River, running northeastward from near the French town of Volmunster toward the German town of Zweibruecken.

The communique also said German aviation was active in the same

Baltic Coup Feared as Soviet Charges Tallinn Helped Poles

By Oliver W. Dewolf,
Associated Press Staff Writer.

Copenhagen, Sept. 19.—With Estonia's coast reported blockaded by Russia's navy, three tiny states lying along the Baltic Sea formed a question mark tonight in the revamping of Eastern Europe's map by the German and Russian military machines.

Dependent for their existence on the mutual interest of Germany and Russia in their independence, Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania were helpless in the surge of events which struck Poland and which may at any time be directed against them.

Despite Russia's assurances of neutrality, there loomed indications that she intended to dominate the North Baltic area, where she was said to want an ice-free port.

Collusion Charged

Uppermost was a report by Tass, official Soviet news agency, that Polish and other submarines had found refuge in Baltic harbors, allegedly with the aid of certain government authorities.

Tass cited the escape yesterday of a Polish submarine which had been interned in the Estonian harbor of Tallinn, adding the claim that it was aided by Estonian officials.

Tass said the Russian navy was apprised of the facts, with the inference that measures would be taken to control similar situations.

The commentary was followed by the report late tonight of the Soviet blockade preventing ships from entering and leaving Tallinn.

In Copenhagen, the Berlinske Tidende carried a report saying English sources believed it was only a question of time before Estonia and Latvia would be incorporated into Russia, advancing as the reason a reported German promise to give Russia a Baltic harbor.

Negotiate Over Wilno

A joint declaration of determination to remain neutral and to uphold their right to trade with all countries, including the belligerents, ended a two-day neutrality conference of representatives of Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Finland and Iceland.

The neutral nations said they hoped to attain their aim through negotiations with the belligerents.

Russian Minister Podziakoff was reported to have conferred today with Lithuanian Foreign Minister Urbsys in Kaunas. It was believed the talk may have centered around Wilno (Vilna), former Lithuanian capital which Poland took in 1920. It was also reported the Lithuanian minister in Moscow had opened negotiations in an effort to regain Wilno.

Lithuania never has ceased to regard the city as her capital.

Evidence of the desire to avoid any friction was seen in the good reception of Soviet neutrality assurances; the report that the chief of the Estonian navy was removed because of the submarine escape; and assurances from Lithuania that despite her desire to recover Wilno the government was firmly following a policy of neutrality and would give no cause for offense likely to prejudice later claims.

Russians Take Wilno

Moscow (Wednesday), Sept. 20 (AP).—The Red Army general staff early today announced the capture of the northeastern Polish city of Wilno, ancient capital of the Lithuanians, "after two hours' fighting."

Wilno, about 85 miles from the Russian frontier, is the most important city yet taken by the westbound Red Army. It has a normal population of about 207,000.

In the south, in the Polish Ukraine, the Soviet troops pressed into the "outskirts" of Lwow, Poland's third largest city, from the northeast and from the south. German troops already had partially encircled the city.

In the north, in western Byelo-Russia (White Russia), red troops also occupied Velika, Berestovitsa, Pruzhany and Kobrin.

In the south, in the western Ukraine, they took the towns of Vladimir, Volynski, Sokol, Brody, Bobrka, Rogatin and Dolina.

Volynski (Wlodzimierz), 140 miles from the Russian border, had also been reached by Nazi motorized units, the German army announced Saturday.

Most of the places reported captured roughly were on a line run-

Berlin, Sept. 1—Adolf Hitler today warne Britain and France that for every bomb thrown on Germn towns he would answer with ve or ten.

In an impassioned-hour-and-14-minute speech accting Danzig into greater Germa, the Fuehrer asserted:

Germany is prepad to wage a seven-year war if nessary.

Hitler pledged he wld conduct a humanitarian war ovided his opponents did likewise but that if they departed from th he would meet them with their on weapons.

The frontier between rance and Germany could remains it is for all time, he asserted.

With England, he sa he desired nothing but friendship.

At the same time, nch of his speech was devoted to bitter attack on the British vernment. France virtually was exapted from all war guilt.

Britain alone is to lame, appeared to be Hitler's coention. He insisted he was willin to accept her challenge.

Waxing fervent and stating with an earnestness that betyed deep emotion, he exclaimed "There is one thing Germany will ever do—capitulate."

Tanned by Campaign

Hitler, after 18 days the eastern campaign in which acquired a much healthier complexion than on the day he met with the Reichstag September 1 to announce his military action in Polan declared he was proud of the achievement of his army, navy and a force.

But he also declared hself honored to be denounced by the British government as the man who must be removed from the European scene.

New York Got $20,500 Cut Of $57,000 Red Fees Paid Here

By James D. Secrest.

Joseph Z. Dalinda, New York patent promoter, yesterda told the Dies committee investating un-American activities that received $20,500 of the $57,000 pa two persons connected with the emocratic National Committee expedite State Department appro of plans for a Soviet super-battlship.

This cut was in payint for introducing first Preston Goodwin, assistant Democratic purity director, and later Scott Fds, Democratic National committman from Oklahoma, to Sam Ca president of the Carp Export & port Corporation and agent for the Soviet government in the negotiations, it was said.

McGoodwin gave Dalda half of his $23,000 fee for "pub relations" activities, the witness said, and Ferris gave him $8,000. Mrs. Ferris was retained, he said, the agreement was that his fees would be split three ways. Dalinda said McGoodwin told him he got a cut but did not say how much.

The Washington contact men performed the job of changing the attitude of the United States Government from negative to "positive cooperation" regarding the battleship project, Dalinda said, and McGoodwin and Carp parted company because the latter refused to pay him additional funds.

Correspondence and memorandums, taken from Dalinda's files and introduced by Rhea Whitley, committee counsel, reported that the Soviet warship project was discussed at several cabinet meetings and a definite government policy

Reply Says Nazi Leader Convicts Self by Crass Misstatements

By Robert Bunnelle
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Sept. 19.—Authoritative quarters reiterated Britain's determination to say "no" to any Nazi peace offer tonight as an official communique charged Adolf Hitler's Danzig speech was "full of crass misstatements."

The statement gave a lengthy review of "the tale of Herr Hitler's broken promises" and said "he can scarcely expect Great Britain to believe that German aspirations are limited and that Germany has no further aspirations in the west."

French Reject Hitler Bid

Hitler's implied bid on his own terms also was rejected by France tonight in a commentary issued to the press which said:

"France and Britain will not let the dictatorship of Hitler condemn the world to slavery and ruin of all moral values and the destruction of liberty."

Sources close to the government said French embassies abroad already had received instructions to notify nations to which they were accredited that France and Great Britain were determined to prosecute the war until the Nazi regime is crushed.

Although France and Britain accepted Russia's declaration of neutrality and are maintaining diplomatic relations with Moscow, these sources said the Allies refused to let the Soviet intervention affect their war policy.

Hitler's speech, in semiofficial French comments, was called a "poor appeal for internal consumption in Germany."

Hitler "Convicts Himself"

Prime Minister Chamberlain, who has asserted repeatedly that "Hitlerism must be smashed" if there is to be lasting peace in Europe, will give his third report on the war to Parliament tomorrow.

Considerable interest was centered on his appearance in the light of Hitler's statement in his speech today that Germany and Soviet Russia would determine Poland's future.

"It is surprising that a man in his responsible position should venture to convict himself so palpably out of his own mouth," the official British statement said of Hitler.

Commenting on Hitler's statement that he could not understand why the Polish government rejected his proposals, the 3,000-word statement said:

"The answer is that the Polish government had before their eyes the shameful betrayal of the solemn assurances given by the German government at Munich.

"They knew that these demands were only the preliminary to future exactions.

His Story Called Travesty

"If Herr Hitler had wished to inspire confidence in his word he should have been less reckless with his earlier promises. 'Germany had no further territorial ambitions in Europe' was an undertaking which had been broken too flagrantly and too often."

Referring to Hitler's charge that Britain, through its blockade, was waging war on women and children the statement said:

"There is no question of Great Britain waging war, as Herr Hitler

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

ON THE PROPAGANDA FRONT

One of these dawns on the Rhine front, when the Tommies are shivering in the early mist, ready to start for Berlin, they're likely to hear a familiar voice on battalion headquarters radios:

Harlan Miller

"This is Neville Chamberlain speaking. We have just arranged an armistice with the Germans. Stack your guns."

* * * *

It won't be the Prime Minister, of course. But it's apt to be a pretty good imitation, broadcasting from Germany, and it will be momentarily confusing.

Radio from Europe will confuse us neutral Americans, too, unless we take it with a grain of salt. Some of the combatants think lies will win the war.

* * * *

The best description of the recent pact between Russia and Germany has been coined by Senator Connally of Texas.

In a moment of inspiration, he referred to it as "the non-agreement pact."

I have counted as many as eight palpable lies in one official broadcast. It happened to be a Berlin broadcast. The Germans don't do such things by halves. The French and British are more subtle; they can convey exactly the illusion they wish without technically deviating from the truth. Theirs is "gentlemanly" propaganda.

"—flowers for the survivors"

So far the best piece of German propaganda has been the politeness of the submarine commander who sank the Olivegrove.

It was a great piece of luck, if it was luck, that the United States liner Washington was nearby to radio a touching account of his gallantry in not shelling the lifeboats.

It was so successful that you can expect sub commanders to present the survivors of future torpedoed ships with bouquets of flowers.

* * * *

The most stupid piece of Berlin propaganda was the denial of the Nazi sinking of the innocent Athenia, apparently rammed by a swimming unicorn, and the next most fantastic was the one about the German bombing pilot who, ostensibly forced to land in a parachute, allegedly had his eyes gouged out by the furious Poles.

How Berlin found out about this within a day or two is a mystery.

And civilians whose children have just been bombed may easily be forgiven for torturing the bomber.

But the most palpable piece of propaganda was the tale of the Bromberg atrocities.

Oeschner, an American journalist, was shown some bodies and told by Nazi officials they were Germans executed by the Poles.

He was also shown some Poles being marched off with hands in the air to be shot "for retribution."

Were the bodies of these Poles later shown to another correspondent as "Germans mutilated by the Poles?"

"—the Bromberg atrocities"

Both Oeschner's tale of the "Bromberg atrocities" and the one by Otto Tolischus, another able American journalist, about Polish hatred of the invaders, and Polish sniping, sounded as if written with mental reservations, tongue in cheek, under the eyes of the Nazi censors.

* * * *

The best part of both was between the lines. Maybe it was worthwhile, to seem to fall for an ersatz Nazi version, to be allowed to stay behind the German lines and check German reports against Allied reports and perhaps strike an unhappy medium. Fortunately, so far the Nazi propaganda has been so crude as to be almost worthless.

* * * *

It is impossible to cite such crass examples of Franco-British propaganda as those cited above.

They would never broadcast such a claim as the capture of Warsaw the first week of the war, or the charge that the British had sunk a German freighter within Brazilian territorial waters, because they have too much finesse to assert something today which will be proved false tomorrow.

The British are strong for the Kipling, G. A. Henty, Percival Wren type of prestige-building propaganda. Theirs is propaganda with a drawl instead of a shout, and in the long run infinitely effective.

The only defense against propaganda, whether crude or subtle, is a heroic skepticism.

In a satirical mood last night, Senator Vandenberg regretted that he had not accepted the Republican nomination for the Vice Presidency in 1936.

"If I had been the nominee," he said, "then I might have been invited to the White House tomorrow to consult with the President on neutrality instead of Col. Knox."

Mayors Urge U. S. Military Force Increase

Conference Advises President Politics Will Be Ignored

The United States Conference of Mayors, meeting here yesterday at the Mayflower Hotel, urged President Roosevelt to increase the Nation's armed forces to full peacetime strength "as the first step in the prevention of war."

The group called at the White House. Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia of New York, president of the conference, said later he had told the President that "this is one group which will adjourn politics."

Meanwhile, officers of the conference, in an informal poll, voted 34 to 11 in favor of substituting a "cash and carry" plan for sale of arms and munitions to belligerents in place of the existing embargo.

The Mayors adopted a resolution expressing full confidence in the desire of the President to keep the country out of the war, and cooperation with him in maintaining neutrality. A copy of the resolution was presented to the President.

Mr. Roosevelt, at his press conference, said city planning was discussed with the group.

The mayors adopted a resolution urging the President to initiate a continuing study of consumer prices so profiteering might be prevented. He was also requested to seek legislation outlawing speculative practices tending to raise prices, if such legislation should be necessary.

The conference authorized the creation, pending action on anti-profiteering legislation, of an "Office of Food Prices" to correlate on food prices and supplies.

Major cities of the country were requested to give the Federal Bureau of Investigation full co-operation in running down cases of espionage, sabotage and subversive activities.

The President was asked to reiterate an appeal to belligerents to cease bombing open cities.

Appointment of a committee to study municipal credit problems was authorized. If it should be found legislation is necessary to provide municipalities with "adequate credit facilities at reasonable rates," the conference agreed, recommendations will be made to the President.

Anaconda Copper Raises Wages of Montana Workers

The heads of two departments of the American Federation of Labor last night announced a joint agreement had been reached with the Anaconda Copper Co., providing an immediate increase of 50 cents a day in wages paid to certain workers in the company's plants and mines at Butte, Anaconda and Great Falls, Mont.

The announcement was made by John P. Coyne, president of the building and construction department, and John P. Frey, president of the metal trades department of the federation.

All building construction and metal trades workeds, affiliated with the A. F. of L. or not, are covered by the increase.

Further increases, it was said, depend on higher prices for copper. Coyne and Frey said they expected prices to rise as a result of the European war.

Sen. Bridges Asks New Deal 'Sweep Out Communists'

Council Bluffs, Iowa, Sept. 19 (INS).—Senator Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire, today demanded the New Deal "sweep the Communists and their fellow travelers out of its council and out of the Washington bureaucracy."

Bridges, a contender for the Republican Presidential nomination in 1940, addressing a Republican women's meeting here, raked the Roosevelt Administration for asserted failure to cure unemployment, farm prices and budget deficits.

He aimed his heaviest salvos, however, at Soviet Dictator Stalin. He said he feared "the diabolical cunning of Stalin and the fiendish minds around him," and "the profound impression which they have made on those intellectuals who dominate the New Deal."

Capt. C. B. Conrad, Of Winchester, Sent to London

The War Department yesterday ordered Capt. C. Bryan Conrad, of Winchester, Va., to duty as assitant military attache at the American Embassy in London.

Capt. Conrad, now on duty at Fort Sill, Okla., with the First Field Artillery, will come to Washington for temporary duty with the military intelligence section of the Army general staff before sailing for England.

Conrad was appointed to West Point from Virginia in 1916. Graduating in 1918, he served as a lieutenant of infantry during the World War, and later was transferred to the Field Artillery.

troops to fight overseas.

The actual comparison of party sentiment follows:

"Should we send our Army and Navy abroad to fight Germany?"

	Yes	No
Democrats	18%	82%
Republicans	13	87

"If it looks within the next few months as if England and France might be defeated, should the United States declare war on Germany and send our troops abroad?"

	Yes	No
Democrats	46%	54%
Republicans	42	58

"Should the United States allow American ships to carry goods anywhere, or should our ships be kept out of war zones?"

	Keep Out	Allow Anywhere
Democrats	85%	15%
Republicans	83	15

"Should the United States allow its citizens to travel on ships of countries which are now at war?"

	Yes	No
Democrats	17%	83%
Republicans	19	81

Should the Constitution of the United States be changed to require a national vote before Congress could draft men for war overseas?"

	Yes	No
Democrats	47%	53%
Republicans	52	48

The similarity of opinion between Democrats and Republicans would seem to indicate that the suggestion recently put forward by Publisher Frank Knox of Chicago for a non-partisan Cabinet in Washington falls on fertile ground.

President Roosevelt's foreign policy, many previous surveys have found, is one New Deal policy which receives the support of a substantial number of Republicans. This fact, plus the new wave of national unity which has swept over the country, appears to have had its effect on the President's popularity with the voters. First early indications of polling since the outbreak of the war show that the decline in his popularity which was noted in a survey a month ago has been halted. While final results of the new survey have not been completed, the early results even point to a slight increase in the number of people who say they approve of Roosevelt as President today.

The question still remaining is how war in Europe will affect the President's chances for election to a third term if he runs. A few months ago, in February, 1939, an Institute survey found that there was an 8 point increase in the percentage of voters favoring a third term if a war was being fought in Europe. A new survey is now being conducted to test whether this sentiment has changed with the actual outbreak of war.

the embargo, attempted solidification of our lines against repeal would be futile. The leadership's decision is to leave each member free to vote the dictates of his own conscience."

Mr. Roosevelt reiterated yesterday that the Administration would restrict its program at the special session to neutrality and on this basis a score of Democratic Congressmen predicted the present law would be eliminated and the session adjourned within 30 days.

Senator Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, however, told the Women's National Press Club, that since Senators Borah (Republican), of Idaho, and Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, had rallied to the support of the present arms embargo law he believed "any proposal to repeal the law will be defeated."

—ADD 4—NL NEUTREAL—A— ...

Thousands of letters on the neutrality issue flooded offices of Senators returning for the session.

Aides of Senators most prominent in the neutrality fight, such as Borah, of Idaho, and Vandenberg, of Michigan, reported that two to three thousand letters were received yesterday—the vast majority favoring retention of the arms embargo.

On the other hand, repeal of the embargo and establishment of a "cash-and-carry" policy for all goods, including arms, was urged yesterday by a Senator from the heart of the allegedly isolationist Midwest—Senator Herring (Democrat), of Iowa.

Herring, who has three sons of military age, declared that he advocated lifting the arms embargo "to help England and France, which is the best way to keep the United States out of war."

Another Midwesterner, Senator Lucas (Democrat), of Illinois, joined the "revisionist" ranks yesterday with the assertion that "I am in favor of a mandatory cash-and-carry policy." A colonel in the National Guard, Lucas said he "had an open mind" on the question of lifting the arms embargo, but inclined to the belief that cash and carry should embrace everything, including arms.

Thirty-four-year-old Senator Holt (Democrat), of West Virginia, just returned from Europe, opposed revision of the present law with the statement that he was "against any change in the rules of the game after the game has begun."

Borah, whose office said he had received 10,000 letters on the issue, 98 per cent of them against lifting the embargo, told reporters that the anti-repealers had gained an important recruit, but he refused to be more specific.

A member of the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, advanced a "purchase and carry system."

"The important thing is the carrying in foreign ships of supplies purchased here. The method of payment, whether cash or credit extended by a private firm, is not vital," he declared.

But Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, declared that "I believe very profoundly that an embargo is a safer way to keep out of this thing than a cash-and-carry system on arms."

"I don't favor a return to international law, under which we got into the last war, as the best way to keep out of this one," he said.

Inquiry Finds WPA Misuse In Many States

Wodrum Reports Funds Diverted to Private Improvements

By the Associated Press

Roanoke, Va., Sept. 19.—Instances of the use of Works Progress Administration funds for the improvement of private property in several States have been uncovered but have not been formally presented to the House committee investigating WPA, Representative Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, said today.

He said investigators, of whom more than a dozen are employed by the committee, have uncovered "some very interesting" things about WPA operations in Louisiana, Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania, New York and other States, but added it was impossible to estimate how much was diverted to private property through "political henchmen." Woodrum is acting chairman of the investigating committee, a sub-committee of the Apropriations Committee.

The Representative said it was his view that publicity should be given the manner in which the program was operated and that "praise or condemnation should be given, whether local or Federal officials are involved."

"Of course, it is common knowledge that local political conditions are such in Louisiana that a program such as WPA could easily be diverted from its intended purposes—and that was done," he continued.

The investigation, purpose of which is to "stop abuses of WPA and waste of funds," now is directed toward operations under the law as it was amended at the last session of Congress, Woodrum said.

He declared "there has been no occasion to have an investigation in Virginia" and added "that doesn't mean perfect operation, but speaks for itself."

3 Who Opposed 1917 War Still In Congress

Norris For, Lundeen OpposesLiftingEmbargo Knutson Third Member

Three men who voted against America's declaration of war on Imperial Germany will take their seats at noon tomorrow as Congress considers the country's position in a new European conflict.

Out of six Senators who answered "Nay" at 11:10 p. m., April 4, 1917, only George W. Norris, of Nebraska, will be in his place when the special session comes to order tomorrow.

Still in office are two Minnesotans who joined 48 other Representatives at 3:15 a. m., April 6, 1917, in a negative vote on the war resolution. They are Ernest Lundeen, now a Senator, and Representative Harold Knutson.

Letters Now Praise Them

In the offices of these three Middle Western legislators, a sampling of constituents' letters yesterday showed many memories stretching back to 1917. Dozens of appeals to keep the United States out of the present struggle were prefaced with expressions of gratitude for the fight against American entrance into the World War.

The thread of 1917 appears to run strongest in the mail of Senator Robert M. La Follette, jr., of Wisconsin, whose father led the "little group of willful" men who blocked "armed neutrality"—the arming of American merchant ships—in March, 1917, after severance of diplomatic relations with Germany.

The next month the elder La Follette took advantage of a parliamentary technicality to delay by 24 hours Senate consideration of President Wilson's war message. When the debate could no longer be postponed, the Wisconsin Senator held the floor for five hours in a plea for American neutrality.

Hanged in Effigy

Senator John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi, called it a speech that "would better have become Herr Bethmann-Hollweg of the German Parliament than an American Senator." The next night La Follette was hanged in effigy at Fourteenth and H streets northwest. Today his son, according to office assistants, is receiving many pleas to "follow in your father's footsteps."

Letters to Lundeen, his secretary stated yesterday, show an overwhelming majority in favor of retention of the present neutrality act, with frequent references to the legislator's stand 22 years ago.

"Your words on the last war have lived in the minds of millions of people of America . . ." said a letter from Minneapolis. A woman wrote from Duluth, "We know from your stand in 1917 that we can depend upon you to do all you can to keep us out of Europe." From Marietta, Ohio: "Time has vindicated you, Senator Lundeen."

Senator Norris' mail is "pretty evenly divided" on revision of the neutrality act, according to an aide. Numerous communications in favor of the mandatory arms embargo are phrased in identical language, he said, while several letters remind the Senator "you stood against war in 1917."

Norris Favors Lifting Embargo

The Nebraskan is on record in favor of the Administration's program for repeal of the arms embargo. Senator Lundeen has spoken frequently in opposition to any change in the present act. Knutson last May urged adoption of a constitutional amendment requiring a popular referendum before any declaration of war.

All three men, and eight more no longer in office, were present April 6, 1937, when the Council on International Relations gave a dinner here for congressional opponents of the war resolution of 1917.

That was the last formal reunion of the dwindling group, but on April 6, 1939, the three still in Congress gave interviews expressing confidence in history's verdict on their vote of 22 years before.

American participation in the World War was "the greatest mistake eve rmade in the history of government in the United States," said Senator Norris. Lundeen called it "a colossal blunder." Knutson said, "Time has proved I did the right thing."

Ruth Overton To Be Crowned Twice on Friday

Twice within an hour Miss Ruth Overton, attractive blonde daughter of the Louisiana Senator, will be crowned queen of the President's Cup Regatta at the water carnival Friday night.

Her first coronation will be held at 7 p. m. in the Corinthian Yacht Club, where Miss Overton and her court will pose in costume for the benefit of photographers.

Later, aboard her flagship, the 75-foot Coast Guard patrol boat, No. 128, Miss Overton will receive the crown again—officially, this time—while yachts of the Corinthian and Capital yacht clubs and a fleet of canoes pass in review in the Georgetown Channel.

Officials announced that while the two coronations are certain, "no information is yet available as to the identity of the person who will crown the queen."

Heart Disease Leads as Death Cause in U. S.

Nine "killers" threaten the population of the United States, according to a study of 1,450,427 deaths in 1937, released yesterday by the Bureau of the Census.

The nine, which accounted for 72 per cent of all deaths in the United States in that year, are diseases of the heart; influenza and pneumonia; cancers and other malignant tumors; nephritis; cerebral hemorrhage and softening; tuberculosis; congenital malformations and diseases of early infancy; motor vehicle accidents, and diabetes mellitus.

Heart disease, leading cause, struck down 23.9 per cent of the total persons who died, with influenza and pneumonia ranking next, accounting for 10.02 per cent. Cancer and other malignant tumors came third, causing 10 per cent of deaths.

Dewey Backer Keeps N. Y. G. O. P. Control

Simpson Candidates Swamp Opposition in 'Silk Stocking' District

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 19.—Kenneth F. Simpson, Republican national committeeman and supporter of Thomas E. Dewey in his race for district attorney, retained control of the New York County G. O. P. committee in today's primary.

Simpson's candidates swamped the opposition in his home district—the so-called "silk stocking" district—where a faction led by Bronson Travor, scion of a wealthy family, sought to weaken him.

The attempt to unseat Simpson was based on his local alliances with the American Labor Party, which figured prominently in the election of Mayor LaGuardia and Dewey.

New Dealer Elected

New York (Wednesday, Sept. 20 (DS).—Election of William H. Fay, New Deal Congressman, as Democratic leader of the Twelfth Assembly District South, appeared to be the only upset suffered by the Tammany organization yesterday in the dullest primary New York City has seen in years.

Fay's unsuccessful opponent was William P. Kenneally, Tammany's oldest district leader. Early returns gave Fay 873 votes to Kenneally's 287 in 5 election districts out of 11.

For the most part, the election was a clean sweep for the "regular" organization candidates, both Democratic and Republican.

Townsend Man Leads

Albany, N. Y., Sept. 19 (AP).—A Townsend plan advocate held an apparent safe lead in a three-way primary race for a Republican Congressional nomination tonight in a New York election otherwise generally devoid of even State-wide interest.

Edwin Arthur Hall, Binghamton, the Townsendite, led in unofficial returns from 172 out of 291 districts of the Thirty-fourth Southern Congressional District.

Hall received 11,292 votes to 8,333 for Calrence L. Chamberlain, and 1,414 for Howard M. Smith.

Flame Gun Fails, Man Garrotes Self

A box of cartridges with three bullets missing, a half-burned candle and a soot-covered pair of pliers yesterday aided police in reconstructing the strange death of a 30-year-old man who was found strangled in his bed at a Washington hotel with two bullet wounds in his forehead. Coroner MacDonald issued a certificate of suicide.

The man, who registered Monday night at the hotel as Joseph Slewsik, of New York City, was found dead yesterday afternoon.

Police believe Slewsik, with the aid of the pliers, heated three cartridges, one at a time, in the flame of the candle, until they exploded. Two bullets struck his forehead, but inflicted only superficial wounds. Police said Slewsik then apparently knotted a necktie about his throat, tied it to the bedpost and slumped down in the bed.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

ON THE PROPAGANDA FRONT

One of these dawns on the Rhine front, when the Tommies are shivering in the early mist, ready to start for Berlin, they're likely to hear a familiar voice on battalion headquarters radios:

Harlan Miller

"This is Neville Chamberlain speaking. We have just arranged an armistice with the Germans. Stack your guns."

* * * *

It won't be the Prime Minister, of course. But it's apt to be a pretty good imitation, broadcasting from Germany, and it will be momentarily confusing.

Radio from Europe will confuse us neutral Americans, too, unless we take it with a grain of salt. Some of the combatants think lies will win the war.

* * * *

The best description of the recent pact between Russia and Germany has been coined by Senator Connally of Texas.

In a moment of inspiration, he referred to it as "the non-agreement pact."

I have counted as many as eight palpable lies in one official broadcast. It happened to be a Berlin broadcast. The Germans don't do such things by halves. The French and British are more subtle; they can convey exactly the illusion they wish without technically deviating from the truth. Theirs is "gentlemanly" propaganda.

"—flowers for the survivors"

So far the best piece of German propaganda has been the politeness of the submarine commander who sank the Olivegrove.

It was a great piece of luck, if it was luck, that the United States liner Washington was nearby to radio a touching account of his gallantry in not shelling the lifeboats.

It was so successful that you can expect sub commanders to present the survivors of future torpedoed ships with bouquets of flowers.

* * * *

The most stupid piece of Berlin propaganda was the denial of the Nazi sinking of the innocent Athenia, apparently rammed by a swimming unicorn, and the next most fantastic was the one about the German bombing pilot who, ostensibly forced to land in a parachute, allegedly had his eyes gouged out by the furious Poles.

How Berlin found out about this within a day or two is a mystery.

And civilians whose children have just been bombed may easily be forgiven for torturing the bomber.

* * * *

But the most palpable piece of propaganda was the tale of the Bromberg atrocities.

Oeschner, an American journalist, was shown some bodies and told by Nazi officials they were Germans executed by the Poles.

He was also shown some Poles being marched off with hands in the air to be shot "for retribution."

Were the bodies of these Poles later shown to another correspondent as "Germans mutilated by the Poles?"

"—the Bromberg atrocities"

Both Oeschner's tale of the "Bromberg atrocities" and the one by Otto Tolischus, another able American journalist, about Polish hatred of the invaders, and Polish sniping, sounded as if written with mental reservations, tongue in cheek, under the eyes of the Nazi censors.

* * * *

The best part of both was between the lines. Maybe it was worthwhile, to seem to fall for an ersatz Nazi version, to be allowed to stay behind the German lines and check German reports against Allied reports and perhaps strike an unhappy medium. Fortunately, so far the Nazi propaganda has been so crude as to be almost worthless.

* * * *

It is impossible to cite such crass examples of Franco-British propaganda as those cited above.

They would never broadcast such a claim as the capture of Warsaw the first week of the war, or the charge that the British had sunk a German freighter within Brazilian territorial waters, because they have too much finesse to assert something today which will be proved false tomorrow.

The British are strong for the Kipling, G. A. Henty, Percival Wren type of prestige-building propaganda. Theirs is propaganda with a drawl instead of a shout, and in the long run infinitely effective.

The only defense against propaganda, whether crude or subtle, is a heroic skepticism.

In a satirical mood last night, Senator Vandenberg regretted that he had not accepted the Republican nomination for the Vice Presidency in 1936.

"If I had been the nominee," he said, "then I might have been invited to the White House tomorrow to consult with the President on neutrality instead of Col. Knox."

Mayors Urge U. S. Military Force Increase

Conference Advises President Politics Will Be Ignored

The United States Conference of Mayors, meeting here yesterday at the Mayflower Hotel, urged President Roosevelt to increase the Nation's armed forces to full peacetime strength "as the first step in the prevention of war."

The group called at the White House. Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia of New York, president of the conference, said later he had told the President that "this is one group which will adjourn politics."

Meanwhile, officers of the conference, in an informal poll, voted 34 to 11 in favor of substituting a "cash and carry" plan for sale of arms and munitions to belligerents in place of the existing embargo.

The Mayors adopted a resolution expressing full confidence in the desire of the President to keep the country out of the war, and cooperation with him in maintaining neutrality. A copy of the resolution was presented to the President.

Mr. Roosevelt, at his press conference, said city planning was discussed with the group.

The mayors adopted a resolution urging the President to initiate a continuing study of consumer prices so profiteering might be prevented. He was also requested to seek legislation outlawing speculative practices tending to raise prices, if such legislation should be necessary.

The conference authorized the creation, pending action on anti-profiteering legislation, of an "Office of Food Prices" to correlate on food prices and supplies.

Major cities of the country were requested to give the Federal Bureau of Investigation full co-operation in running down cases of espionage, sabotage and subversive activities.

The President was asked to reiterate an appeal to belligerents to cease bombing open cities.

Appointment of a committee to study municipal credit problems was authorized. If it should be found legislation is necessary to provide municipalities with "adequate credit facilities at reasonable rates," the conference agreed, recommendations will be made to the President.

Anaconda Copper Raises Wages of Montana Workers

The heads of two departments of the American Federation of Labor last night announced a joint agreement had been reached with the Anaconda Copper Co., providing an immediate increase of 50 cents a day in wages paid to certain workers in the company's plants and mines at Butte, Anaconda and Great Falls, Mont.

The announcement was made by John P. Coyne, president of the building and construction department, and John P. Frey, president of the metal trades department of the federation.

All building construction and metal trades workeds, affiliated with the A. F. of L. or not, are covered by the increase.

Further increases, it was said, depend on higher prices for copper. Coyne and Frey said they expected prices to rise as a result of the European war.

Sen. Bridges Asks New Deal 'Sweep Out Communists'

Council Bluffs, Iowa, Sept. 19 (INS).—Senator Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire, today demanded the New Deal "sweep the Communists and their fellow travelers out of its council and out of the Washington bureaucracy."

Bridges, a contender for the Republican Presidential nomination in 1940, addressing a Republican women's meeting here, raked the Roosevelt Administration for asserted failure to cure unemployment, farm prices and budget deficits.

He aimed his heaviest salvos, however, at Soviet Dictator Stalin. He said he feared "the diabolical cunning of Stalin and the fiendish minds around him," and "the profound impression which they have made on those intellectuals who dominate the New Deal."

Capt. C. B. Conrad, Of Winchester, Sent to London

The War Department yesterday ordered Capt. C. Bryan Conrad, of Winchester, Va., to duty as assitant military attache at the American Embassy in London.

Capt. Conrad, now on duty at Fort Sill, Okla., with the First Field Artillery, will come to Washington for temporary duty with the military inteiligence section of the Army general staff before sailing for England.

Conrad was appointed to West Point from Virginia in 1916. Graduating in 1918, he served as a lieutenant of infantry during the World War, and later was transferred to the Field Artillery.

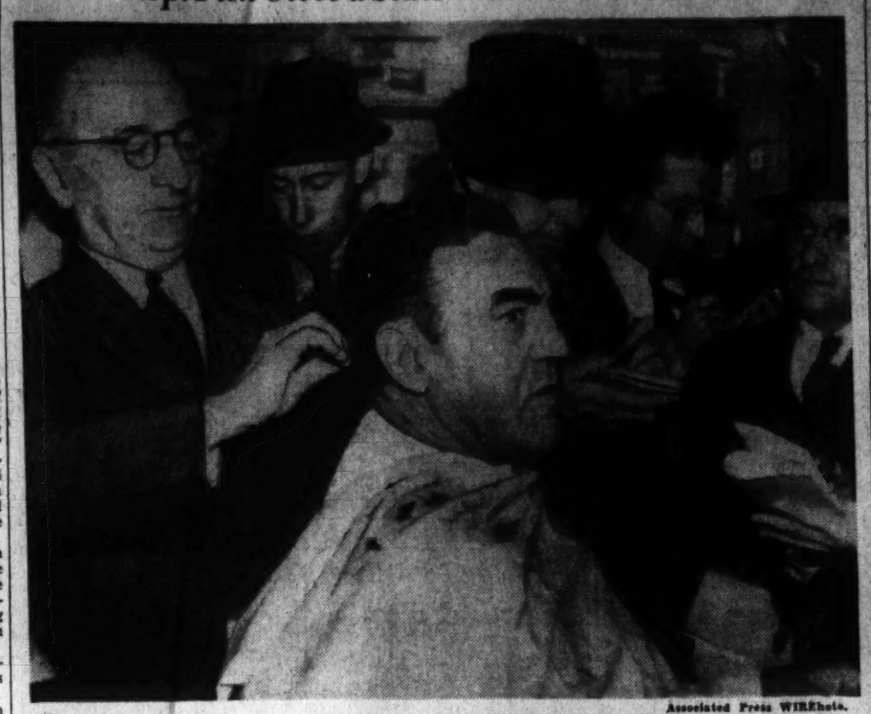
Rep. Fish Gives a Statement From the Chair



Associated Press WIREphoto.

Representative Hamilton Fish, of New York, ranking Republican member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, was getting a haircut in the ship's barber shop when newsmen cornered him for a statement on neutrality legislation. Representative Fish arrived in New York yesterday from Europe's war zone aboard the U. S. liner President Harding. He stated he did not believe there would be any repeal of the present neutrality law troops to fight overseas.

The actual comparison of party sentiment follows:

"Should we send our Army and Navy abroad to fight Germany?"

	Yes	No
Democrats	18%	82%
Republicans	13	87

"If it looks within the next few months as if England and France might be defeated, should the United States declare war on Germany and send our troops abroad?"

	Yes	No
Democrats	46%	54%
Republicans	42	58

"Should the United States allow American ships to carry goods anywhere, or should our ships be kept out of war zones?"

	Keep Out	Allow Anywhere
Democrats	85%	15%
Republicans	83	15

"Should the United States allow its citizens to travel on ships of countries which are now at war?"

	Yes	No
Democrats	17%	83%
Republicans	19	81

Should the Constitution of the United States be changed to require a national vote before Congress could draft men for war overseas?"

	Yes	No
Democrats	47%	53%
Republicans	52	48

The similarity of opinion between Democrats and Republicans would seem to indicate that the suggestion recently put forward by Publisher Frank Knox of Chicago for a non-partisan Cabinet in Washington falls on fertile ground.

President Roosevelt's foreign policy, many previous surveys have found, is one New Deal policy which receives the support of a substantial number of Republicans. This fact, plus the new wave of national unity which has swept over the country, appears to have had its effect on the President's popularity with the voters. First early indications of polling since the outbreak of the war show that the decline in his popularity which was noted in a survey a month ago has been halted. While final results of the new survey have not been completed, the early results even point to a slight increase in the number of people who say they approve of Roosevelt as President today.

The question still remaining is how war in Europe will affect the President's chances for election to a third term if he runs. A few months ago, in February, 1939, an Institute survey found that there was an 8 point increase in the percentage of voters favoring a third term if a war was being fought in Europe. A new survey is now being conducted to test whether this sentiment has changed with the actual outbreak of war.

the embargo, attempted solidification of our lines against repeal would be futile. The leadership's decision is to leave each member free to vote the dictates of his own conscience."

Mr. Roosevelt reiterated yesterday that the Administration would restrict its program at the special session to neutrality and on this basis a score of Democratic Congressmen predicted the present law would be eliminated and the session adjourned within 30 days.

Senator Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, however, told the Women's National Press Club, that since Senators Borah (Republican), of Idaho, and Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, had rallied to the support of the present arms embargo law he believed "any proposal to repeal the law will be defeated."

—ADD 4—NL NEUTRAL—A— ...

Thousands of letters on the neutrality issue flooded offices of Senators returning for the session.

Aides of Senators most prominent in the neutrality fight, such as Borah, of Idaho, and Vandenberg, of Michigan, reported that two to three thousand letters were received yesterday—the vast majority favoring retention of the arms embargo.

On the other hand, repeal of the embargo and establishment of a "cash-and-carry" policy for all goods, including arms, was urged yesterday by a Senator from the heart of the allegedly isolationist Midwest—Senator Herring (Democrat), of Iowa.

Herring, who has three sons of military age, declared that he advocated lifting the arms embargo "to help England and France, which is the best way to keep the United States out of war."

Another Midwesterner, Senator Lucas (Democrat), of Illinois, joined the "revisionist" ranks yesterday with the assertion that "I am in favor of a mandatory cash-and-carry policy." A colonel in the National Guard, Lucas said he "had an open mind" on the question of lifting the arms embargo, but inclined to the belief that cash and carry should embrace everything, including arms.

Thirty-four-year-old Senator Holt (Democrat), of West Virginia, just returned from Europe, opposed revision of the present law with the statement that he was "against any change in the rules of the game after the game has begun."

Borah, whose office said he had received 10,000 letters on the issue, 96 per cent of them against lifting the embargo, told reporters that the anti-repealers had gained an important recruit, but he refused to be more specific.

A member of the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, advanced a "purchase and carry system."

"The important thing is the carrying in foreign ships of supplies purchased here. The method of payment, whether cash or credit extended by a private firm, is not vital," he declared.

But Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, declared that "I believe very profoundly that an embargo is a safer way to keep out of this thing than a cash-and-carry system on arms."

"I don't favor a return to international law, under which we got into the last war, as the best way to keep out of this one," he said.

Inquiry Finds WPA Misuse In Many States

Wodrum Reports Funds Diverted to Private Improvements

By the Associated Press

Roanoke, Va., Sept. 19.—Instances of the use of Works Progress Administration funds for the improvement of private property in several States have been uncovered but have not been formally presented to the House committee investigating WPA, Representative Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, said today.

He said investigators, of whom more than a dozen are employed by the committee, have uncovered "some very interesting" things about WPA operations in Louisiana, Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania, New York and other States, but added it was impossible to estimate how much was diverted to private property through "political henchmen." Woodrum is acting chairman of the investigating committee, a sub-committee of the Apropriations Committee.

The Representative said it was his view that publicity should be given the manner in which the program was operated and that "praise or condemnation should be given, whether local or Federal officials are involved."

"Of course, it is common knowledge that local political conditions are such in Louisiana that a program such as WPA could easily be diverted from its intended purposes—and that was done," he continued.

The investigation, purpose of which is to "stop abuses of WPA and waste of funds," now is directed toward operations under the law as it was amended at the last session of Congress, Woodrum said.

He declared "there has been no occasion to have an investigation in Virginia" and added "that doesn't mean perfect operation, but speaks for itself."

Meat Inspection Rules Modified

The Commissioners yesterday approved health regulations designed to bring meat inspection rules in line with those enforced by the Federal Government.

Recommended by Dr. R. R. Ashworth, head of the food inspection service of the Health Department, the rules are in effect within 30 days. He explained the new requirements only apply to smaller slaughter houses not inspected by the Federal Government.

3 Who Opposed 1917 War Still In Congress

Norris For, Lundeen Opposes Lifting Embargo
Knutson Third Member

Three men who voted against America's declaration of war on Imperial Germany will take their seats at noon tomorrow as Congress considers the country's position in a new European conflict.

Out of six Senators who answered "Nay" at 11:10 p. m., April 4, 1917, only George W. Norris, of Nebraska, will be in his place when the special session comes to order tomorrow.

Still in office are two Minnesotans who joined 48 other Representatives at 3:15 a. m., April 6, 1917, in a negative vote on the war resolution. They are Ernest Lundeen, now a Senator, and Representative Harold Knutson.

Letters Now Praise Them

In the offices of these three Middle Western legislators, a sampling of constituents' letters yesterday showed many memories stretching back to 1917. Dozens of appeals to keep the United States out of the present struggle were prefaced with expressions of gratitude for the fight against American entrance into the World War.

The thread of 1917 appears to run strongest in the mail of Senator Robert M. La Follette, jr., of Wisconsin, whose father led the "little group of willful" men who blocked "armed neutrality"—the arming of American merchant ships—in March, 1917, after severance of diplomatic relations with Germany.

The next month the elder La Follette took advantage of a parliamentary technicality to delay by 24 hours Senate consideration of President Wilson's war message. When the debate could no longer be postponed, the Wisconsin Senator held the floor for five hours in a plea for American neutrality.

Hanged in Effigy

Senator John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi, called it a speech that "would better have become Herr Bethmann-Hollweg of the German Parliament than an American Senator." The next night La Follette was hanged in effigy at Fourteenth and H streets northwest. Today his son, according to office assistants, is receiving many pleas to "follow in your father's footsteps."

Letters to Lundeen, his secretary stated yesterday, show an overwhelming majority in favor of retention of the present neutrality act, with frequent references to the legislator's stand 22 years ago.

"Your words on the last war have lived in the minds of millions of people of America . . ." said a letter from Minneapolis. A woman wrote from Duluth, "We know from your stand in 1917 that we can depend upon you to do all you can to keep us out of Europe." From Marietta, Ohio: "Time has vindicated you, Senator Lundeen."

Senator Norris' mail is "pretty evenly divided" on revision of the neutrality act, according to an aide. Numerous communications in favor of the mandatory arms embargo are phrased in identical language, he said, while several letters remind the Senator "you stood against war in 1917."

Norris Favors Lifting Embargo

The Nebraskan is on record in favor of the Administration's program for repeal of the arms embargo. Senator Lundeen has spoken frequently in opposition to any change in the present act. Knutson last May urged adoption of a constitutional amendment requiring a popular referendum before any declaration of war.

All three men, and eight more no longer in office, were present April 6, 1937, when the Council on International Relations gave a dinner here for congressional opponents of the war resolution of 1917.

That was the last formal reunion of the dwindling group, but on April 6, 1939, the three still in Congress gave interviews expressing confidence in history's verdict on their vote of 22 years before.

American participation in the World War was "the greatest mistake eve rmade in the history of government in the United States," said Senator Norris. Lundeen called it "a colossal blunder." Knutson said, "Time has proved I did the right thing."

Twice within an hour Miss Ruth Overton, attractive blonde daughter of the Louisiana Senator, will be crowned queen of the President's Cup Regatta at the water carnival Friday night.

Her first coronation will be held at 7 p. m. in the Corinthian Yacht Club, where Miss Overton and her court will pose in costume for the benefit of photographers.

Officials announced that while the two coronations are certain, "no information is yet available as to the identity of the person who will crown the queen."

Heart Disease Leads as Death Cause in U. S.

Nine "killers" threaten the population of the United States, according to a study of 1,450,427 deaths in 1937, released yesterday by the Bureau of the Census.

The nine, which accounted for 72 per cent of all deaths in the United States in that year, are diseases of the heart; influenza and pneumonia; cancers and other malignant tumors; nephritis; cerebral hemorrhage and softening; tuberculosis; congenital malformations and diseases of early infancy; motor vehicle accidents, and diabetes mellitus.

Heart disease, leading cause, struck down 23.9 per cent of the total persons who died, with influenza and pneumonia ranking next, accounting for 10.02 per cent. Cancer and other malignant tumors came third, causing 10 per cent of deaths.

Dewey Backer Keeps N. Y. G. O. P. Control

Simpson Candidates Swamp Opposition in 'Silk Stocking' District

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 19.—Kenneth F. Simpson, Republican national committeeman and supporter of Thomas E. Dewey in his race for district attorney, retained control of the New York County G. O. P. committee in today's primary.

Simpson's candidates swamped the opposition in his home district—the so-called "silk stocking" district—where a faction led by Bronson Travor, scion of a wealthy family, sought to weaken him.

The attempt to unseat Simpson was based on his local alliances with the American Labor Party, which figured prominently in the election of Mayor LaGuardia and Dewey.

New Dealer Elected

New York (Wednesday, Sept. 20 (INS).—Election of William H. Fay, New Deal Congressman, as Democratic leader of the Twelfth Assembly District South, appeared to be the only upset suffered by the Tammany organization yesterday in the dullest primary New York City has seen in years.

Fay's unsuccessful opponent was William P. Kenneally, Tammany's oldest district leader. Early returns gave Fay 873 votes to Kenneally's 267 in 5 election districts out of 11.

For the most part, the election was a clean sweep for the "regular" organization candidates, both Democratic and Republican.

Townsend Man Leads

Albany, N. Y., Sept. 19 (AP).—A Townsend plan advocate held an apparent safe lead in a three-way primary race for a Republican Congressional nomination tonight in a New York election otherwise generally devoid of even State-wide interest.

Edwin Arthur Hall, Binghamton, the Townsendite, led in unofficial returns from 172 out of 291 districts of the Thirty-fourth Southern Congressional District.

Hall received 11,292 votes to 8,333 for Calrence L. Chamberlain, and 1,414 for Howard M. Smith.

Flame Gun Fails, Man Garrotes Self

A box of cartridges with three bullets missing, a half-burned candle and a soot-covered pair of pliers yesterday aided police in reconstructing the strange death of a 30-year-old man who was found strangled in his bed at a Washington hotel with two bullet wounds in his forehead. Coroner MacDonald issued a certificate of suicide.

The man, who registered Monday night at the hotel as Joseph Slewsik, of New York City, was found dead yesterday afternoon.

Police believe Slewsik, with the aid of the pliers, heated three cartridges, one at a time, in the flame of the candle, until they exploded. Two bullets struck his forehead, but inflicted only superficial wounds. Police said Slewsik then apparently knotted a necktie about his throat, tied it to the bedpost and slumped down in the bed.

Poles, Defiant, Hold Warsaw To Bitter End

Radio Pictures Ruin Of City; Soviet, Nazis Plan New Regime

By the Associated Press

Budapest, Sept. 19.—Warsaw's defiance of the German army's demand for surrender was broadcast again by the Polish capital's radio tonight after a day-long shelling and bombardment. The announcer in a tired voice recited in English a story of devastation resulting from the 12-day-old siege.

"Warsaw presents a very pitiful sight," he said. "Buildings, monuments, museums and art galleries are in ruins. We will fight to the last drop and never surrender."

The German army delivered an ultimatum to the Warsaw population, dropping leaflets from airplanes, last Saturday, ordering it to evacuate the capital under threat of bombardment. The ultimatum expired Sunday afternoon.

Polish authorities rejected the ultimatum.

New Regime Expected

Cernauti, Rumania, Sept. 19 (AP).—Establishment of a new Polish regime friendly to Germany and Soviet Russia after partition of Poland by those powers was predicted today in reports from across the Polish frontier.

Maps mailed from Germany were circulated here showing such a buffer state between powerful neighbors.

Informed persons said a new government, replacing the regime of President Ignace Moscicki and Foreign Minister Josef Beck, would sign an immediate peace with Germany and Russia.

Significance was attached to the maps, although they were not regarded as official. They envisaged Russia as getting all of eastern Poland from a line drawn from south of Przemysl to the east Prussian frontier northwest of Bialystok.

The map-makers assumed that Germany would take the territory west of a new frontier which would start below Katowice, extend north nearly to Lodz, then loop westward near the present German frontier and finally swing northeast to join the east Prussian border.

Posen to Germany

Poznan (Posen) and Bydoszcz (Bromberg) would be incorporated in Germany. Lwow and Wilno (Vilna) would become Russia's.

Soviet occupation of Polish territory across the frontier from Rumania continued apparently without resistance. There were no reports of bloodshed. To Poles the advent of the Russians meant relief from two weeks of almost continuous bombings.

Poles and Russians fraternized in the occupied regions.

Rumanian and Soviet military authorities opened negotiations for reopening the frontier over which thousands of panic-stricken Poles have fled. News of the negotiations caused those stampeding into Rumania to falter and then stop.

Some Hope to Return

Some Poles appeared at the bridgehead hopeful of returning to their homes with most of their possessions carried on their backs. Many others, however, moved on into Rumania hoping to rebuild their fortunes and lives elsewhere.

Foreign diplomats and Polish refugees who escaped into Rumania described a ceaseless German bombardment in towns and cities of unconquered sections of Poland.

They reported towns were almost blasted into the air ahead of the German advance.

On the road from Warsaw to Seidlce, Americans said they saw German bombers attempting to shatter telephone and telegraph lines. They had annihilated a Polish army truck convoy and had bombed 15 civilian motor cars. Several were overturned with bodies of their occupants scattered about.

Bullet Holes in Cars

Several Polish autos on Cernauti streets were marked by machine gun bullet holes.

The Japanese Ambassador to Poland, Shuichi Sakoh, departed with his staff for Bucharest. The Japanese were the last of the diplomatic missions accredited to Warsaw to leave Poland.

The last American diplomat to leave, Leland Harrison, Third Secretary of the United States Embassy in Warsaw, said Polish Jews made up more than half of a terrified mob which fled into Rumania from Zaleszczyki when Polish border guards opened the barrier. Harrison left for Bucharest.

The guards also scurried into Rumania.

The Jews had been held at the Polish border for several days by Rumania's refusal to grant them entry.

Many Polish Jews at the outbreak of hostilities moved into Polish cities near the Russian frontier, preferring to risk Soviet occupation to German conquest.

Poland Never to Rise Again, Says Hitler; Offers Peace to Allies but on His Own Terms of Germany and Russia must first be satisfied.

Beyond his references to Poland's fate he did not announce his war aims in precise terms. He merely said they were very moderate.

He implored the same God, who he said visibly blessed German forces the past 18 days, to grant enlightenment to Germany's adversaries so they could appreciate the blessings of peace and cease making war.

Counts 300,000 Prisoners

Of the Poles, he said the Bible verse applied which refers to the Lord who smote them with their men and horses.

Three hundred thousand Polish soldiers, he declared, now German prisoners, were part of the price Poland has had to pay for her "follies."

The Fuehrer asserted it was an error to suppose that a cleavage could be made between the German leadership and its people—a statement which Germany's newest citizens, Danzig's 400,000, cheered wildly.

New solidarity with Russia was one of the highlights of his statement of policy.

"Russia remains what she is, and Germany remains what she is," he said, "and those who believe these new political friends shortly will be having a falling out are doomed to disappointment."

Flowers Strewn on Road

It was a triumphant entry Hitler made into Danzig. All along the 10-mile drive from the seacoast resort of Zoppot flowers had been strewn along the road. Flags and Pennants were displayed in windows decorated with Hitler's pictures.

But the crowd itself was the most interesting exhibit.

Old women weeping for joy, staid Red Cross nurses breaking through sturdy lines of brown-shirted S. A. men, children shouting, young students forcing their way to Hitler's car almost at the risk of their lives—these were some of the sights.

For the first time on the way to a public demonstration the Nazi chieftains drove in a six-wheeled military car. He was followed by two Gestapo cars in which guards sat with new repeater rifles which can fire 25 shots.

Hitler spoke in the medieval Artushof (Guildhall) as the crowning event of his first visit to Danzig since he brought the former Free City on the Baltic "back home into the Reich." The wildly heiling populace accorded him a frenzied welcome.

Hitler at times appeared to be almost beside himself with hysterical excitement.

Blames Allied Agitators

Dwelling at length on Nazi relations with Britain and France, he said "I have always endeavored to bring about friendly relations."

"In the west and south," he declared, "Germany made important concessions hoping to bring about definite peace in Europe. We believe we would have been successful had downright war agitators not always upset our efforts."

Taking notice of British assertions that the war might last for three years, the Fuehrer shouted:

"It will be dependent upon us if the war lasts that long.

"If it should last three years the word capitulation will not stand at its end, nor will it stand at the end of the fourth, fifth, sixth or seventh year.

Fervor Rivals That of '14

"They (the Allies) are not facing a Germany of Bethmann-Hollweg (German chancellor when the World War began) but a Germany of Friedrician time (Frederick the Great)."

"I wanted to achieve real friendship . . . but if England today thinks it is necessary to make war on Germany it will be disappointed."

Hitler stated for what was believed to be the first time publicly, that he did "not want the Ukraine"—Russian territory which, on the basis of his book "Mein Kampf," many believed to be the ultimate object of his Drang Nach Osten—drive to the east.

Concluding his speech, Hitler said the German people were much more enthusiastic than in 1914, "but now it is not superficial hurrah patriotism but emphatic determination."

He went into a lengthy review of what he said were his attempts to reach a settlement with Poland without war, asserting:

"I attempted to find a way to connect East Prussia with the Reich and provide an outlet to the sea for Poland. I was too moderate. But I did it because I wanted to spare the German as well as the Polish people the other solution.

"In return for these I was ready to guarantee the Polish borders despite hardly bearable conditions. I don't know what state of mind the Polish government was in when it refused this offer . . . who could have made Poland so blind?"

Of Danzig, he said: "This land is German and will remain German forever."

The Nazi chieftain's speech was broadcast by the entire radio systems of Germany, Hungary, Slovakia and Scandinavian nations and was relayed to the United States.

Hitler declared economic realities were ignored and peoples oppressed by the treaty which ended the World War.

"If foreign statesmen say they can not have faith in the word of German statesmen," he added, "we can say we have no confidence in the word of the men who made the Versailles Treaty."

The Fuehrer declared that "German activity, German labor, and German culture was the basis" for Poland, and added:

"The Poles did not create their country. Their own culture demonstrated they were unable to maintain this culture."

German-Polish differences, he asserted, were a question of whether "a people of lesser cultural importance will develop their minority complex and become brutal and cruel to a people of greater cultural importance."

Turning again to what he described as his peace efforts, Hitler said:

"I succeeded in removing all tension between Italy and Germany. . . . I went further and tried to bring about the same relations with France in a practical way. . . . But France was subject to British influence."

Other highlights included these statements:

"We will fight the war in the same manner that others fight. . . . The English are leading a war against the women and children even of neutral states (by blockade).

"I do not know how England or France or America would have dealt with such a peace solution (Versailles). . . .

"The Germany of today does not accept ultimatums. This should be remembered . . . the Reich will not be talked to in such tone. . . .

"England should be happy to know that Germany and the U. S. S. R. came to terms. Moreover, it should have a quieting effect upon the Edens and the Churchills that Germany does not want to conquer the Ukraine. . . .

"It depends upon the decisions of the two greatest nations of Europe (Germany and Russia) how the final settlement will look. . . .

Maps similar to this were drawn by Germans and distributed yesterday at Cernauti, Rumania. Map indicates how Russia would acquire a "new Ukraine" denoted as territory inside a line running north from the Rumanian border, east to Przemysl, across the Bug River to a point north of Bialystok, thence eastward to the Soviet border. A "new White Russia" would be partitioned north of the "new Ukraine." Germany would occupy an area from the boundary running through Oderberg to east of Katowice, then almost to Lodz, then cutting wastward and northward to include Poznan, thence northeasterly to a point east of Bydgoszcz, to Graudenz and into East Prussia. The remaining part of Poland would become a buffer Polish state with no access to the sea and without Poland's former major industrial areas

Wallace Asks Industry to Balk Profiteer

Manufacturers' Group Asserts Peace Is Objective of U. S.

By the Associated Press

Secretary Wallace asked farm, food and clothing industry leaders yesterday to co-operate with the Government to prevent "profiteering" during the European war.

The request came at a meeting of the agricultural advisory council, composed of 30 farm and business leaders.

Wallace said that unless there was such co-operation, detrimental conditions might arise, and that the Government wished to avoid "regimentation" of the food industry.

Various members of the council stated in response that, because of industry organizations, the food and clothing trades were in a much better position to prevent profiteering than during the World War.

New York, Sept. 19 (AP).—The National Association of Manufacturers asserted tonight that "peace must be the national objective" and "industry opposes profiteering."

A statement issued by Howard Coonley, president, on behalf of the organization, said.

"American industry hates war.

"War destroys lives. War wrecks homes. Economic chaos and years of crushing depression are its inevitable aftermath. It imperils representative democracy . . . American industry wants peace . . . Peace must be the national objective . . .

"The United States can stay out of war. Emotionalism can betray us into war. A public will to peace, coupled with wise public policies and affirmative action to this end by our government, will keep us out of war . . .

"Europe's problems do affect us, but our domestic problems still must come first. If yesterday industry was the only source of prosperity and re-employment, today it is as well the keystone of preparedness and peace. Under any conditions, America must depend on a smoothly functioning, efficient industrial system."

Italian Ships Bar Passage To Germans

Fear British May Intercept Liners, Interne Passengers

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 19.—Fear of British interception of Italian steamers at sea blocked the return tonight of 30 German nationals to their homeland.

The Italian Line said it would deny passage to all holding passports from the Reich.

Although officials said they had received no explanation of the order from Genoa, it was obviously intended to discourage the searching of Italian vessels at sea by the British for the possible capture and internment of German nationals.

The order, one spokesman said, supposedly would affect all Italian ships, including those in South American waters, and particularly those passing Gibraltar, the British lookout over the Mediterranean. The order said, "Do not book passengers with German passports."

Baroness Put Off

Rich and poor alike were turned back from the pier and three passengers—including the wealthy Baroness Ruth von Oppenheim, of Cologne—were escorted from the ship.

The baroness protested angrily she was seeking to return to her three children in Cologne.

She had come to this country August 28, with her husband, the Baron Frederich Carl von Oppenheim, to visit friends in California and to tour South America.

Earlier, her husband had been advised that no men bearing German passports would be permitted to sail on the Rex, but that women would be allowed. With the baron was his brother, the Baron Harold von Oppenheim.

The baroness appealed vainly by wireless to the Italian offices of the line, then exclaimed, "even in the last war the British did not take women and intern them."

Status Here Uncertain

What the plight of the 30 might be if they were unable to obtain passage on other ships remained undetermined. Rudolph Reimer, United States Immigration Commissioner, said if "their documents are in good order, and they can show it is impossible for them to return, or can show some legitimate reason why they must remain, I can see no reason why they would not be granted an extension of limited stay."

Other steamship lines said they had received no applications from persons holding German passports for passage to Europe. A Swedish-American Line spokesman said such an application "might be refused" on the grounds that carrying of Germans into the Baltic Sea, past the North British Isles, "might subject us to iniquities."

The United States liner President Harding docked this afternoon with 602 war refugees aboard, 153 over capacity.

Roosevelt May Ask Labor to Heal Split For Unity in War

President Roosevelt may send a new appeal to organized labor next month to end its long controversy and present a united front on domestic problems arising from war in Europe.

It is expected that the appeal will be contained in a message to the American Federation of Labor convention in Cincinnati October 2.

Daniel J. Tobin, head of the A. F. of L. Teamsters Unino, indicated the message would be a fresh call for unity between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. He and Secretary of Labor Perkins had conferred with Mr. Roosevelt.

Tobin went on to say that the President was anxious that there be no strikes at this time, and evinced interest when told what "unrest" now existed in labor ranks.

ditional $200,000,000 in appropriations for the current year when Congress considers the first deficiency supply bill in January. This would provide for the increases recently authorized by the President and for filling other chinks in the national defense structure, he declared. It would bring the total provided for defense in the current year to $2,000,000,000.

The military chairman said he would call his committee together shortly after Congress meets to study the defense picture, but that no legislation would be recommended unless the session develops into a long one. He asserted that Congress should repeal the embargo and then adjourn, as asked by President Roosevelt, adding that "it would have a good effect on Europe."

Proposes CCC Training

May urged expanding the Army from the 227,000 goal ordered by the President, September 8, to the peace-time limit of 280,000 and a similar enlargement of the National Guard from 235,000 to 425,000 men. He proposed immediate appropriation of funds to supply full fighting equipment for 600,000 men, in addition to that for 400,000 men now being provided, and additional personnel and training for the Reserves, R. O. T. C. and C. M. T. C. Limited military training should be instituted in the CCC, he declared, to "use the same dollar twice."

Meanwhile, the Navy announced that 14 new Marine Corps main recruiting stations and 16 new substations throughout the country will be opened to speed that service's expansion program. At the same time, the department awarded a $1,998,420 contract to the Vought Sikorsky division of United Aircraft Corporation, for new Navy planes and parts.

60,000 Bottled Up in New Push, Japan Claims

Reports 3,000 Chinese Killed in Intensified Drive Into Kiangsi

By the Associated Press

Shanghai, Sept. 19.—Japanese claimed tonight their troops had bottled up 60,000 Chinese soldiers near Kaoan and that their air force had killed 3,000 in the revived offensive in Kiangsi Province.

Chinese sources, however, denied heavy losses, saying only that they were engaged in heavy fighting. The Japanese, they said, "even with the aid of the air force," were unable to disturb Chinese positions and themselves suffered heavy losses in attempting to negotiate the ravines and streams abounding in the area.

The Japanese claimed capture of Kaoan was imminent, thus "opening the way farther westward."

Chinese reported they had cut the Nanchang-Kiukiang Railroad north of Nanchang, base of the renewed Japanese drive in Kiangsi. This was said to have stemmed the Japanese push from the city, and another Chinese column was reported advancing toward Nanchang from the south.

A group of Chinese leaders of the Japanese-dominated Peiping provisional government arrived at Nanking and were reported conferring on the establishment of a central puppet administration for Japanese-occupied parts of China.

Trek of Horror By Trapped Czechs Told

Only Handful of 600 Fleeing Poland Reach Haven, American Says

By the Associated Press

Cernauti, Rumania, Sept. 19.—A cruelling, zig-zag trek across Poland by 600 Czecho-Slovak refugees who sought safety from the German army—an aim which only a handful achieved—was described tonight by Hermann Field, of Cambridge, Mass.

Field represented the British Committee for Refugees from Czecho-Slovakia in Krakow, Poland. He was one of the last foreigners to cross the Rumanian frontier in advance of Soviet Russia's tanks.

"We walked day and night for 12 days until we were exhausted," Field said. "We begged food in villages and farms. We slept in barns, open fields, woods and along dusty roads.

"A half-dozen times we were in villages and towns when they were frightfully bombed by German planes.

"And after experiencing all of that only a few of the poor devils ever escaped."

The Czechs, all refugees from German-occupied Czecho-Slovakia, were fearful capture by the Germans would mean immediate death before a firing squad.

Field said the small group escaped Poland at Zaleszczyki but most of the 600 still were wandering around in Poland.

"Many were killed and we saw several hundred wounded," Field said.

When German planes bombed Krakow for three days at the start of the German-Polish war, Field decided to clear the Czech encampment. The British committee previously had sent 1,600 Czechs to England but 3,000 remained in Krakow.

Field started the long and dangerous march across Poland with the 600, including old men, women and children, on September 4. Only a few crossed the border to safety in Rumania on September 16.

Another group of several hundred Czechs also left Katowice afoot but Field said he had no information on their fate.

Shortly after leaving Krakow, the wanderers were caught in an air raid at Sandoierz. While they were at Krasnnik, he said, German planes bombed the Jewish quarter, killing 70 persons.

Many refugees were caught when the Germans suddenly cut across a road in a wedge which had been driven into the Polish lines.

"Bombing scattered the dwindling Czech column," Field said. "Many old men, women and children dropped exhausted by the roadside, unable to struggle on.

"Some were caught by the swift Russian occupation of southeastern Poland.

"A few of us got out of Tarnopol just before the Russian tanks rolled in—and you almost can count on your fingers the weary but valiant few who finally crossed the border to a Rumanian haven."

New Yorker Got Cut of Soviet Fees

was adopted after Ferris had held several conferences with Secretary Hull.

One of the letters allegedly written by Dalinda to Carp, which the former could not remember writing, stated:

"It is now widely known that as a direct result of the work of your Washington representative and his associates, a negative and later a passive attitude was changed to positive cooperation.

"Secretary Hull presented the case to his superior. As a result of this, the matter was discussed at several cabinet meetings, at which a definite governmental policy was laid down. Following that course, the State Department and proper Navy authorities were advised and later instructed to give all possible assistance to your plans in connection with the building of a naval ship for the U. S. S. R."

The same letter also described the work of "Mr. T.," whom Dalinda identified as Alexander Troyanovsky, the Soviety Ambassador, in behalf of the battleship project.

"Mr. T. ascertained everything from the Big Chief himself, as also from other high authorities," the letter stated.

Dalinda said he could not identify "the Big Chief," but added that it "suggests to me Mr. Roosevelt."

Committee members pointed out, from time to time, that there would have been nothing irregular had the Soviet government proceeded with the idea of constructing a superbattleship in the United States so long as no American naval secrets were utilized. It was for this reason that the plans had to be passed upon by the State and Navy departments.

At one point in the examination

Profited in Warship 'Deal'

Harris & Ewing

J. Z. DALINDA,
New York inventions broker, told the Dies Committee yesterday that he received a $20,500 cut of the money paid two persons connected with Democratic National Committee to expedite State Department approval of plans for a Soviet super-battleship of Dalinda, Whitley abruptly asked: "Did you ever hear Carp boast that he had Troyanovsky recalled?"

Dalinda, squirming uneasily in his chair, turned to Chairman Dies and appealed to him not to press the question

Has Relatives in Russia

"You see I've still got relatives in Russia," he explained.

A few minutes later Chairman Dies interrupted to ask the witness if he had not known President Harding and if his name had not figured in the Teapot Dome scandal.

Dalinda admitted knowing the late President but denied being involved in the Teapot Dome inquiry.

A sleek, rotund person, Dalinda said he came to the United States from Russia in 1915, became a citizen in 1916, and is now non persona grata with the Soviet government. One of the reasons he began dealings with Carp, a brother-in-law of the Soviet premier-foreign affairs commissar, Dalinda said, was because he hoped Carp would use his influence to get Dalinda's two brothers out of Russia.

Carp, whose Russian name is Carpowski, according to Dalinda, claimed that he got his assignment to act as Soviet agent direct from Stalin and boasted that he had $200,000,000 in American banks to make the purchases of war supplies.

Met Carp in 1937

Dalinda said he had met Carp on March 1, 1937, in the New York Republican Club. When he demanded proof of Carp's authority to represent the Soviet government, the Russian military attache from Washington was brought to a subsequent conference.

When asked by committee members whether he had heard Carp boast of spending millions of dollars of Soviet money in this country, Dalinda replied that he had but that he disbelieved him.

"He's not a Communist by any means," the witness added. "All he wants is to make money."

"That doesn't disqualify him," interjected Dies. "We've learned that the Communists in this country have handled a lot of money."

The witness got mildly excited when Whitley produced a copy of a cablegram addressed to Stalin and expressing condolences over the death of the dictator's mother. The cablegram was unsigned, though it bore a note in Dalinda's handwriting directing that a draft be sent to Stalin.

Dalinda denied emphatically that he had written or authorized the cablegram, but suggested that Carp might have done it in his office.

U-Boats Sink 2 More British Fishing Vessels

579 Missing on Carrier Courageous, Admiralty Reveals

By the Associated Press

Germany struck at England's vital food-fish supply again yesterday, while relatives and friends of seamen aboard the torpedoed British aircraft carrier Courageous hopefully studied survivor lists of the new war's greatest sea tragedy to date.

The admiralty announced early today that its final list of survivors of the Courageous left approximately 578 men not accounted for.

The official list gave the number of survivors as approximately 682—610 seamen and 72 officers.

The admiralty said that "from all the information available" the list issued early today "must be regarded as the final list of survivors from H. M. S. Courageous."

The 578 not accounted for were 560 seamen and 18 officers.

Captain Stood at Salute

The survivors of the Courageous related that Capt. W. T. Makeig-Jones, after ordering his signalers to abandon ship with the rest of the crew, was seen standing at salute on the bridge before the ship went down.

He had called to his men "Take your time, boys, there's no hurry."

Some survivors said they later saw the captain swimming strongly.

The British announcement that the trawlers Arlita and Lord Minto had been sunk brought the known loss in fishing vessels to four and England's total shipping loss to 26.

The sinking of the four trawlers indicated that U-boats were lurking close to English and Irish shores. The German submarine that sank the trawler Rudyard Kipling towed its survivors to within 5 miles of the Irish coast. The Davara was destroyed in the Irish Sea.

The German high command contended that the submarine which sank the Courageous had escaped, saying in a communique that the sinking "was confirmed by a report of the German submarine which attacked the carrier."

The British had expressed an opinion that the submarine was sunk and one British seaman was quoted as saying he saw it "blown to bits."

Germany's alacrity in sending her surface craft home or to neutral harbors at the outbreak of war kept down her known losses. The last definite German loss occurred eight days ago when the old-type destroyer Oresund struck a mine near Sweden—the ninth Nazi casualty.

Ships Lost

Total known losses in ships mounted to 42, including six neutrals and one French. Gross tonnage lost was raised to at least 198,612 and at least 207 persons are known to have been killed—exclusive of the lives lost on the Courageous.

The British Admiralty also reported that the cruise steamer Paris, damaged with the loss of one sailor, had been salvaged.

Referring to reports that the German liner Scharnhorst at Kobe was being converted into a warship, the British ministry of information said Britain had been informed by Japan that arming of German craft in Japanese harbors would not be permitted.

Graf Spee Was Raided

An authorized interview with John Smith, 19, who dropped the first British bomb of the war, disclosed the German pocket battleship Admiral Graf Spee was the principal victim of the raid on Kiel September 4.

Other developments in the sea struggle:

France announced that "the submarine warfare has begun under excellent auspices. "A semi-official statement said "four or five" submarines had been sunk by French warships. England had previously announced that "many" Nazi subs had been destroyed.

In a warning to the United States Government the French advised "that all vessels other than French warships are forbidden to approach the French coast at night, closer than 6 miles."

CAPRICE OPENING. That glittering spot, the Cafe Caprice, will stage its fall opening party on Thursday, September 28, says Manager Daniel Wathey of the Roger Smith Hotel. Adele Van, winner of the talent contest recently conducted on the Roger Smith roof garden, will be the new Caprice canary. Mr. Wathey also promises a flock of bright surprises, including a new dance music unit ideally suited to the gold crystal and chromium background of Caprice.

Afternoon cocktail dancing is now in order every day in the Shar-Zad Room. To Bill McCune's danceable rhythms. Gay vocalizing, too, by the Three McCusicals and Nightingale Catherine Hoyt. Those sharp arrangements, you'll be interested to know, are made by Pianist Tom Husted.

SHOREHAM WORLD'S FAIR. On Monday eve the beautiful new "Rainbow Fountain" at the Shoreham was turned on for the first time by Manager Gardner Moore. While just a small group, including Amusement Manager and Mrs. Maxim Lowe and Press Agent Joe Deupree, were on hand for the event, the brilliant lights of the fountain attracted so much attention that the outdoor cocktail terrace was crowded in no time. The fountain is beautiful as any World's Fair effect, with dozens of changing light combinations. And big! It holds 100,000 gallons of water. The Shoreham management refuses to be committed on whether it'll stage an aquacade.

Opportunity Special. The Hi Hat management is scouring both Washington and the out-of-town booking agencies for clever talent for that Tenth Anniversary Party for the Ambassador Hotel. It's due to be the biggest party ever tossed at the Ambassador. Which is saying a lot. So if you're a good "sweet" singer or comic, you should call on Oscar at the Hi Hat. Date for the big party has been changed to Monday, October 2.

TROIKA NEWS. Mrs. Helen Hamilton, the exotically charming owner of the Troika, is back in town and, though she looks like a butterfly, is making the Troika hum like a beehive in anticipation of that brilliant opening on Wednesday, September 27.

A top-flight motion picture star (name secret) will star in the new Troika revue. There'll be a new galaxy of Russian talent, too. But Vanya and Lola, the glamorous dancers of last season will return. That favorite meastro, Sash Lukas, will lead a Meyer Davis orchestra. Mischa, the ever-suave, will again greet you at the door. Theodore, the prince of chefs, will again concoct the borscht and blini. Ah! and there'll be a beautiful and wise new crystal gazer called the "Irish Duchess." Troika begins its eighth season earlier than usual largely because of its excellent new air conditioning equipment.

The rainbow in the Rainbow Room is being glorified. An artist will add some glorious new tints to the rainbow. And then a lighting expert will do tricks in iris-colored illumination.

ADVANCE HARVEST MOONING. These dance eliminations preceding the "Harvest Moon Ball" have proven tremendous. At the tango contest at the Hamilton Hotel more than 125 would-be paying customers had to be turned away. The rumba contest packed the Mayflower Lounge with standees all over the place.

Tomorrow night it's the jitterbug contest at the Metronome Room at Wardman Park. And something tells us it's going to be a hectic session. Leader Chet de Chastain and Arranger Bill Dunmore have worked out some of the jitteriest jitter-bug music conceivable. Here come the rug-cutters!

Walter Scott, violinist of Art Barker's Mayfair Trio, believes in violin insurance. He has two violins, identically made. So if a string pops on one fiddle, Walter can carry on with the other without a break.

HILDA ELFONTE,
lovely dancer at the Lotus

BAMBOO HEROINE: Beth Deanne, the vivid new dancer at Bamboo Gardens, arrived in town with a temperature of 103—really a very sick girl. But she refused to quit, did her tango and "Estrellita" dance with Partner Martin so brilliantly that you'd never have dreamed she wasn't in the pink. New at Bamboo (and very nice, too) are the Dance Versatiles, who caper gayly in Russian and gypsy dances.

Gracie, of the Madrillon, is not only one of the best dressed cigarette girls in town. She makes all of her elaborate evening gowns with her own pretty little paws. One exception is that yellow tafjeta formal covered with ruffles.

MEMORIES DEPARTMENT: George Bersch, pianist with the Three Couriers at the Neptune Room, has happy memories of the nights when he played with Brooke Johns on the Washington Roof.

Al and George of the Brown Derby have unhappy memories of the first time they played in Washington. It was a one-night stand and the manager decamped with the box-office receipts.

Pete Macias, maestro of that society playground, the Lounge Riviera, has feverish memories of the eves when he played in La Java, one of the town's prohibition night clubs.

Lou Williams, leader at Maryland Gardens, has rocking memories of the days when he used to syncopate on the S. S. Volendam of the Holland-American Line.

Arthur Todd, of the King Cole Room, has a simply thr-rilling memory of the time he played "Deep Purple" at the special request of Head Glamour Girl Brenda Frazier.

U. S. to Inspect War Prisoner Camps in Reich

Charged With Seeing That British, French Get Fair Treatment

By Andrue Berding
Associated Press Staff Writer

One of the extraordinary duties thrust upon the American Government by the war is to see that British and French prisoners of war get fair treatment in Germany.

In consenting to represent British and French interests in the Reich, the Government also agreed to look after the condition of the prisoners from those countries.

The American Embassy in Berlin and various consulates will carry on the necessary inspections, which in time may embrace tens of thousands of men. They will expect German treatment to follow the provisions of a treaty regarding prisoners of war signed in Geneva in 1929 by Germany, Great Britain, France, the United States and 43 other nations.

Under this agreement, prisoners are given a wide range of rights, over which the "protecting power"—in this case the United States—has the duty of inspection.

Reprisals Prohibited

Prisoners of war must at all times be humanely treated and protected. Reprisals against them are prohibited.

No coercion may be used to obtain information about their army or country.

All their personal effects, including money, remain their property.

Prisoners may not be placed in prisons, but in buildings or barracks affording all possible guarantees of healthfulness. Their living quarters, food and water must be equal to those of troops at German base camps. They have the right to medical attention and to admission to hospitals.

Prisoners of different nationalities and races may not be commingled; officers must be separated from the rank and file. Officers taken prisoners need salute only German officers of an equal or higher rank.

Germany may utilize the labor of British and French prisoners, but the labor must have no direct relation with war operations. Conditions of work must not be heavier than for the civil workers employed in the same work. Wages must be paid. Officers are exempt from work unless they ask for it.

The prisoners will be permitted to send mail and to receive mail and parcels containing food, clothing and books.

Prisoners may be punished for infraction of camp rules, but the punishment may not be corporal; it may not be more severe than that provided for German soldiers with regard to the same offense.

If a judicial proceeding is instituted against a British or French prisoner for a serious offense, American diplomatic representatives must be notified at least three weeks before the opening of the trial. If the prisoner does not choose a defense counsel, the American embassy or consulate may name one.

The prisoner has the same right to appeal from a sentence as a German soldier.

Germany will be obligated to send back to Britain and France seriously sick or injured soldiers as soon as possible.

The American diplomatic corps in Germany is now under the direction of Charge d'Affaires Alexander C. Kirk, of Chicago, there being no ambassador.

Why Do They Kill Each Other? Grandfather Finds No Answer

By Charles Mercer.

A visitor at the National Museum yesterday saw a small boy and his grandfather wander aimlessly along a corridor of the lower floor and pause at a small exhibit of mementoes of the late Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink displayed in two cases. He watched them closely as the boy pressed candy-sticky hands against the case, his lips spelling the words on a placard.

"Grampa, who's that?"

The gray-haired man was looking wearily around for a bench. "Who's what?"

"Madame S-c-h——"

"She was a great singer who was born a German and became an American, and made a lot of people very happy."

"What are all these medals for, Grampa?"

The old man studied the case. "Famous people and organizations gave her some of 'em. She was given the rest for her five sons who fought in the war. Four fought for the United States and one for Germany. The one who fought for Germany and one on our side were killed."

"What did they shoot each other for?"

The old man scratched his head. "They didn't shoot each other, boy. They——"

"Well, if they was on opposite sides they must have tried to shoot each other. Was it because the Germans are awful butchers?"

"The Germans aren't awful butchers, boy. It's just that—that one saw his duty as different from the others even though they were blood relatives."

"Gee, that's funny. If you fought for Germany and me for America I wouldn't want to kill you."

The grandfather took his hand. "Come along, boy. It's one of those things you won't understand until you're older."

Arnold Warns Of Overgrowth By War Industries

New York, Sept. 19 (A.P.).—Thurman Arnold, head of the Justice Department's anti-trust division, warned tonight against over-expansion of industries producing war supplies.

In an address prepared for the National Public Housing Conference at the World's Fair, he said the housing industry offered the greatest opportunity among non-war industries to prevent "economic unbalance."

"As a neutral nation we may expect a rush of capital to invest in industries which furnish supplies to belligerents," he said, "with resulting price rises and increased profits.

"We have such a surplus of capital and productive capacity that there should be enough idle capital willing to invest in stable enterprises, even in time of war."

50,000 Poles Held Taken In New Battle

Bzura River Fight Over; Tiny Force 'Waits for British' Near Gdynia

Berlin, Sept. 19.—The German army, still opposed in government-abandoned Poland by widely scattered forces, reported today the capture of 50,000 prisoners and "immense booty" after crushing a Polish army in one of the biggest battles on the Eastern Front.

The high command's announcement of victory on the Bzura River west of Warsaw came as military activity was reported resumed at Warsaw and a force of between 2,000 and 3,000 Polish troops waged a desperate fight against heavy odds west of German-conquered Gdynia, once Poland's seaport.

Mopping Up Proceeds

Some captives taken in repeated German onslaughts against the little contingent near Gdynia were quoted as saying they were "waiting for the British to arrive." The fight in the Gdynia sector was raging furiously when Fuehrer Hitler arrived at nearby Danzig for his triumphal entry into that city.

The German communique said "dissolution and capitulation of scattered or encircled remnants of the Polish army are progressing rapidly.

"The battle of the Bzura River is over.

"Up to now, 50,000 war prisoners have been taken and immense booty captured. The final amount cannot be estimated."

More Free to Attack Capital

Losses were believed heavy on both sides.

The tersely-worded announcement referred to a nine-day engagement along the Bzura north of Lodz, a textile manufacturing center and the second city in size in Poland.

Lodz is about 75 miles southwest of Warsaw and the German triumph in the Lodz area apparently relieved thousands of Nazi troops for the attack on the Polish capital.

The German high command declared fighting was resumed at Warsaw when an emissary failed to appear to negotiate on the surrender of the city, which was demanded by the Germans last Sunday.

"The city is being defended by the Poles without regard for the population, which is over a million strong," asserted the German communique.

There was no indication of what form the military activity was taking.

The defenders at the tip of what was the Polish Corridor were entrenched in positions on heights west of Gdynia known as Oblosz and in the village of Ochshoeft.

Correspondents who had gone to Danzig for the Hitler speech were taken to the scene and watched the battle from a distance of only 2 miles.

German land, sea and air forces were reported pounding at the Polish force. The newsmen saw three German waves advance on the fortified positions during an hour's stay and each time the Nazis won some 10 yards more of hotly contested ground.

The land forces were supported by scouting planes which dropped signals to guide the artillery. Also blasting away at the Poles were the 28 centimeter (about 11-inch) guns of the German cruiser Schleswig-Holstein, anchored 10½ miles away in Danzig harbor.

The Poles also seemed to have no antiaircraft guns, for the scouting planes flew low and were not bothered.

In southeastern Poland, the city of Lwow was called on to surrender to the Germans, the communique said.

Northwest of Lwow, it was reported, some fighting units of the enemy were destroyed and about 10,000 prisoners were captured.

Turning to the Western Front, the communique said "insignificant artillery and reconnoitering activity occurred at some points in the Saarbruecken region. It was observed that our opponents were doing manifold trench digging. Fighting actions in the air did not occur."

Poles to Go to France

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

Paris, Sept. 19.—President Ignace Moscicki of Poland and the members of the Polish government who have taken refuge in Rumania intend soon to take up their residence in France, Le Temps announced tonight.

It was believed the Polish government will continue to function on French soil, enjoying for the this purpose the privilege of extra-territoriality. A precedent exists in the case of the Belgian government during the World War.

Julius Lukasiewicz, the Polish ambassador in France, announced in a radio address tonight the "Polish state, allied with France and Great Britain, will pursue the war in new positions, with the same inflexible will of conquering the enemies."

The organization of a Polish army to fight on French soil, under its own colors, has already commenced, the ambassador said, calling on his compatriots living in France to enlist.

British Say Hitler Convicts Self by Crass Misstatements

Comely Eileen O'Connor, 19-year-old Fort Worth, Tex., dancer, bid Paris au revoir when war broke out in Europe and cut short her engagement at the Bal Tabarin. Yesterday she waved and said hello to America as she arrived in New York aboard the U. S. S. President Harding declares, on German women and children. The German government has already declared that there are ample stocks of food in Germany, but the restriction of the import of raw materials is not a measure of which the German government can legitimately complain.

"Finally, Herr Hitler's account of the circumstances attending the outbreak of war is a travesty of the facts. He was determined on war and hoped to the last that Great Britain would not fulfill her treaty obligations to Poland.

"It was only two days after the invasion of Poland when no reply had been received to the British communication that an ultimatum was addressed to the German government."

The British Broadcasting Corporation broadcast in Polish tonight a message to Warsaw from "the British people" asserting "all the world is admiring your courage. Once again Poland has fallen victim to the aggressive designs of her neighbors . . . We, your allies, intend to continue the struggle for restoration of your liberties."

King Visits Troops

King George paid a surprise visit to troops in training in the west of England. He lunched on a rug behind a haystack.

Other activities on the British war front:

Maj. Gen. Edward Windsor, Britain's former ruler, visited the foreign office.

Opposition Leader Clement R. Attlee and Arthur Greenwood, deputy labor leader, called on Chamberlain.

Queen Elizabeth organized a work party to make hospital bandages and garments.

Pocket Testaments with a special message from the King were ordered for all soldiers and sailors.

The air ministry tonight issued its first casualty list, reporting 17 officers and men missing. Only one was listed as "believed killed." Three were "believed prisoners of war" and the others just "missing."

Yugoslav-Soviet Talks Reported

Belgrade, Sept. 19 (AP).—Negotiations for the recognition of Soviet Russia by Yugoslavia and the conclusion of a nonaggression pact were reliably reported under way tonight.

Hitherto Yugoslavia and the Moscow regime have not had diplomatic relations.

Voja Gorgevic, former Yugoslav agriculture minister and now president of the Serb Peasant Co-opertives, flew to Moscow a few days ago accompanied by a general and a diplomat.

Gorgevic returned to Belgrade yesterday, but today took an airplane again for an "unknown destination."

Belgrade diplomats saw a sudden improvement of relations between the world's greatest Slavic power and the small Slav kingdom on the Adriatic as affecting the balance of power in the whole of the Balkans.

The Yugoslav regent, Prince Paul, always has been considered a stern opponent of an accord with Soviet Russia. Thousands of Russian monarchists still are harbored in Yugoslavia, and some have risen to important positions in the civil service.

There is an historic precedent for Yugoslav-Russian friendship, however. It was czarist Russia which came to the help of little Serbia—the nucleus of post-war Yugoslavia—when Austria laid down her ultimatum in 1914.

A friendship with Bulgaria has been cultivated assiduously by Soviet leaders, and a Russo-Yugoslav entente would put Pan-Slavism virtually on the plane of 25 years ago.

Railroads Vote $170,000,000 For Equipment

25,000 New Freight Cars, Repair of All Now Laid Up, Covered

By Felix Cotten.

Presidents of the Nation's leading railroads, at a meeting here yesterday, approved a $170,000,000 program for purchase and repair of equipment to take care of anticipated increases in freight traffic caused by war conditions.

The chief feature of the program is immediate repair of all freight cars and locomotives which have been standing unused on sidings. This will cost, it is estimated, $100,000,000.

In addition, railroad heads approved purchase at once of 25,000 new freight cars, which, at a cost of $2,800 each, will mean an outlay of $70,000,000.

The program was authorized at a meeting of chief officers of lines holding membership in the Association of American Railroads. It represents the biggest general undertaking by association members for rehabilitation of equipment since 1923.

Purchase of the 25,000 new cars will increase to 46,000, it was said, the total number of new cars built for the country's class one roads this year.

Repair of equipment, which will enable the roads to handle 50 per cent more freight traffic than at present, will be financed to a considerable extent out of current cash, rail officials said. Some roads, however, probably will ask the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to lend part of the funds.

Jesse H. Jones, Federal loan administrator, revealed railroads had arranged in the last 60 days to borrow $125,000,000 to buy new equipment. Of this amount, he said, the RFC will lend only $25,000,000. This money presumably will be used in part to finance purchase of the new freight cars.

Rail chiefs reported a considerable pick-up in traffic, particularly since Labor Day. Traffic reaches a seasonal peak about the middle of October and thereafter there is some let-down. Whether there will be this year is a question.

Traffic now is 18 per cent greater than in May, the low month.

The repair program, officials said, should be completed within five or six months. Roads participating in the repair and purchase program include the Baltimore & Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York Central, Southern, Norfolk & Western, the Erie and the Chesapeake & Ohio

Really, Blime, the Earl Jolly Well Has Nothing to Say!

British Lord Blames The Censorship, Doncha Know, for Everything

The Earl of Warwick, a languid fellow with a long cigarette holder and a great castle in Blighty, came to Washington yesterday insisting that he knew no more of what is going on at home than anyone in America.

It is the censorship, always a bit bad in the beginning of such times as these—which are "very bad times, you know?" But it is very good to see somebody, the Earl was sure, and the ordering of Scotch and sodas is no special hospitality, really.

But the Earl had no copy for the press, really. He said this standing in his suite at the Carlton Hotel. He reiterated it after he had seated himself on the divan, reposing momentarily with the body's weight upslung onto the shoulders.

The Earl is a tall man, dark haired, 29, and with sleepy eyes. He has been in America for some years, casting about at the movies and now wondering what will happen. England can call an earl.

But the insistence was that he had nothing to say, and this was because he knew nothing of things at home. It's the censorship, of course.

Hello now, someone has arrived. "I must ask you out. And were the Scotch and sodas really finished? Terribly sorry. I had nothing to say, really. I'm terribly sorry."

Asserts Poland Will Rise Again

In a bitter denunciation of the "sinister forces . . . bent on the annihilation of Poland" Polish Ambassador Jerzy Potocki yet urged strict neutrality for American Jews of Polish extraction Monday night.

Speaking at the conference the federation of Polish Jews in New York, Potocki declared: "As American citizens you must follow only the leadership of your country and act strictly in accordance with its interests and traditions. We in Poland do not know the meaning of divided loyalities. We do not want to introduce them here."

Predicting an ultimate Polish victory, he added "In the struggle between might and right Poland will win. The time will come . . . that Poland will rise again mightier after its trial."

The Post Is Now in Its Sixth Consecutive Year of Leadership in School Advertising

Each year since 1934, and for the first eight months of 1939, local schools have placed more of their display advertising in The Post than in any other Washington newspaper. This continued leadership can mean but one thing . . . school advertising in The Post gets results.

And because of this leadership, Washingtonians intent on furthering their education have become accustomed to looking to The Post for their school information. Whether you are planning to advertise your school, or are seeking the right school for yourself or your children, let the experience of others be your guide and use The Washington Post, first.

Vatican Fears Russian Ambition

Vatican City, Sept. 19 (AP).—L'Osservatore Romano, Vatican City newspaper, tonight expressed fear that the Soviet Russian army might follow its thrust into Poland with an attempt to spread communism farther into Europe.

The Vatican newspaper said a radio broadcast from Moscow asserted that the aim of the invasion was "not only to protect the White Russians and the Ukrainian minority, but to open the way to communism toward the western world."

Dejected Poles Wearily Trudge Into Rumania

Writer Counts 10,000; Many Claim Allies 'Let Them Down'

By Edward W. Beattie, Jr.
United Press Staff Writer.

Bucharest, Sept. 19.—Poland's army of refugees, soldiers and civilians, trudged wearily into exile today along 200 miles of dusty road, many of them saying that Great Britain and France and their own government had deceived them.

They knew little and seemed to care little what had happened to their war-torn homeland, whether Warsaw had fallen or whether Poland would become a Nazi-Soviet "puppet" state.

Too Dejected to Talk

But they were resentful of the swift rout of the Polish army.

Many of them told me that Poland's army was capable of a long fight against German tanks, guns and planes.

They accused the Polish government, now on Rumanian soil, of deceiving the people.

Most of them add that Britain and France "let Poland down" by not hurling their strength against Germany on the western front to relieve the Nazi blows against Poland.

Some of them are saying that British and French planes should have bombed Germany in reprisal for the work of German planes which devastated town after town in Poland and sometimes swept down and machine-gunned people in the streets.

Rumanian Soldiers Cheer Poles

But thousands of the refugees are too weary and dejected to talk about Poland's defeat. They are wondering how they will pick up their lives again. Most of them shrug their shoulders and say tomorrow is another day.

This army of refugees is the remnants of what a few days ago was a finely equipped army, apprehensive but confident families and a government functioning in Warsaw.

Today I found it scattered along the 200-mile route, on its way to internment in concentration centers or to cities of refuge somewhere ahead.

From Cernauti southward the stream of refugees is constant, but toward the Rumanian capital it trickles off to a few officials and other favored persons permitted to proceed as far as Bucharest.

Some of the Polish refugees, like the several thousand members of the Polish air force now on Rumanian soil, would like to go to France.

While the refugees flow southward Rumanian troops are moving northward in trains or along the roads to bolster the defense of the northern frontier. Some of the Rumanian soldiers ride farm horses, commandeered from the countryside. They cheer the Polish soldiers as they pass.

From Cernauti, I followed the refugee road through Siretsuchawa, Falticeni, Bacau, Maresest and Buzau over a dusty and bumpy road that in some sections would put to shame the logging trails of the American north woods.

Most of the refugees were halted at Buzau and told that they could not enter Bucharest.

Soldiers Interned

A few, however, did get through to Bucharest after giving their names and histories and repeatedly answering the question:

"What is the purpose of your visit?"

All Polish soldiers are being halted and interned at least 150 kilometers (93 miles) from Bucharest. Eventually the civilians will be allowed to go on.

The Rumanian officials for the present seem to be concentrating their efforts on trying to keep the refugee stream from the north headed in one direction along one highway line.

I passed at least 10,000 refugees between 10 a. m. yesterday and 1 a. m. today, roughly 100 miles north of Bucharest. They were camped beside roads, crowded into dingy little restaurants in unkempt villages offering their Polish zloty for sausage, cheese, or a plate of greasy goulash.

Usually the cafe owners took the zloty without knowing what they could get for them at the bank.

The welcome to the Poles on Rumanian soil is a warm one everywhere.

Crowds gather around the new arrivals shouting "Long Live Poland!" and asking questions and offering help in several of the languages familiar to the people of central and eastern Europe.

Few of the Poles responded, although I saw several soldiers in ragged uniforms chatting with village girls.

For the most part, the refugees keep to themselves, sitting at cafe tables in small groups.

"We don't like to talk about the last two weeks," a middle-aged man told me.

Most of these thousands of refugees have not seen a bed in ten days and have slept, when they were able, among their bundles in the fields.

Last night I saw whole families huddled together under trees and haystacks, so exhausted that they seemed not to notice that it was raining in torrents.

Many Trudging Homeward

Jaslo, Poland, Sept. 19 (AP).—Tens of thousands of hapless Polish refugees are plodding homeward wearily over the dusty roads along which they fled before the advancing Germans.

Deep in Polish Galicia, the refugees are emerging from forests and other winding places, some a hundred miles from their homes. Most of them travel afoot and some in rickety carts, but during the last few days German supply trucks, returning empty from the front, have given lifts to many.

Scores of women carrying babies in shawls slings, the men trudging along beside them with great packs on their shoulders—packs containing all their remaining possessions. Many of the children of walking age lead the family cow, chewing her cud unconcernedly.

Some of the families stuffed their possessions into decrepit baby buggies, which often broke down. Nearly all the refugees were barefoot.

At Tarnow, a city of 55,000 east of Krakow, hundreds of the homeless Poles congregate all day opposite the local German commander's headquarters to wait for empty trucks returning from the front. On their arrival they are mobbed by the refugees.

Pilsudski's Widow in Exile

Kaunas, Lithuania, Sept. 19 (AP).—More than 20,000 Polish soldiers were reported today to have crossed the Lithuanian frontier and been disarmed and interned.

Lithuanian authorities took over about 100 Polish tanks which had fled before the German and Russian drives.

The Polish flight across the border was continuing.

The widow of Marshal Joseph Pilsudski, Poland's military hero, and her two daughters were among some 600 civilian refugees crossing into Lithuania.

Paris, Sept. 19.—Premier Daladier today called into conference with Gen. Gamelin all heads of his diplomatic service, Champetier de Ribes, undersecretary for foreign affairs; Robert Coulondre, the premier's first lieutenant in handling the foreign situation, and Alexis Leger, secretary general of the foreign ministry.

This meeting can be considered as preliminary to a cabinet meeting tomorrow.

Russian Navy Reported Blockading Estonia; Coup Feared After Charge of Aid to Poles

ning north and south through Wilno and Lwow. It had been understood the Russian invasion would be halted somewhere along this line, so there was the possibility the drive might be about ended.

The Soviet troops either have met or have stopped a stone's throw from the German forces at several points along the 500-mile-long line.

As the German-Russian campaign of mopping up in Poland seemed to be nearing an end, the possibility that Soviet troops might march into little Estonia was discussed in Moscow's diplomatic circles.

News that the Soviet Baltic fleet was sent into action to "take measures" following the escape of a Polish submarine interned at the Estonian port of Tallinn, was regarded here as significant.

Russia Wants Baltic Base

Soviet Russia's present sea base on the west is Leningrad, on the Gulf of Finland, and Russia is known to want a Baltic base.

Diplomats said that should Russia decide to occupy part of Estonia this might give her complete control of the Gulf of Finland. Estonia now has a number of fortified islands in the gulf as well as shore batteries controlling certain large sectors.

Estonian circles in Moscow insisted, however, there was not a single conflict in the relations of their government with the Soviet Union. They emphasized that their guards had tried to prevent the escape of the submarine and denied there was any connivance.

Peace Proposal Predicted

Sources close to the German embassy predicted that the Reich, with the Polish campaign nearly over, might make a fresh approach to France and Britain for peace. (Adolf Hitler in a Danzig speech said he had "no war aims" against the two western powers.)

These quarters said Germany now was transferring numerous airplanes and troops from the Polish to the western front.

Rumors that the British and French governments had presented a protest against Russian occupation of Polish territory could not be immediately confirmed.

A communique from the Soviet general staff reported that Russian forces continued to "eject troops of the Polish army" as they advanced westward.

Polish Estates Liquidated

A dispatch to the army newspaper, Red Star, disclosed that the process of liquidating huge estates in the Ukraine and White Russia already was under way.

Army commanders were reported to be instructing peasants to "take the land for the people" and to "turn your cattle into the landlords' pastures."

Tass, official news agency, said that the advance of the Russian armies was received by joyous crowds which lined the roads and that girls decked the tanks and horses with flowers. The agency reported "stirring meetings" of the populace and Soviet army units.

"We advanced at such lightning speed," Tass reported, "that all bridges on our way remained intact and telephone, telegraph lines and power stations are working normally."

The Polish ambassador, Dr. Waclaw Grzybowski, who hopes to leave Thursday by way of Rumania, called on United States Ambassador Steinhardt today. The nature of their long conversation was not disclosed.

Reich Incident Feared

Copyright by New York Times.

Tallinn, Estonia, Sept. 19.—The escape of the interned Polish submarine Orzel yesterday morning from the harbor of Tallinn may lead to a diplomatic incident with Germany over an alleged breach of the neutrality law.

The Estonian governments acted promptly to avert a conflict by summarily dismissing the commander of the naval forces and the chief of naval staff. A special committee has been appointed to discover whether or not other parties are guilty of neglect.

It appears that the Polish officers and crew of 60 heard Sunday night of the Soviet attack in Poland and decided to put to sea.

Navy Planes Leave Hawaii for Manila

Honolulu, Sept. 19 (AP).—Fourteen naval planes, with American flags stenciled on their wings, left Pearl Harbor today en route to Manila. The Navy merely announced "a flight" had departed for Manila, giving no details.

British to Defend Belgian Frontier

Dispatches from Basel, Switzerland, said French troops, basing their action from Sarreguemines on the south and the Blies on the east, moved northeast this morning and captured the German village of Bebelsheim, 3 miles from Sarreguemines, where French artillery had reduced German defenses to rubble. The village had been deserted days ago.

In the afternoon the French were reported to have surrounded the village of Wittersheim, 1½ miles deeper in German territory.

Germans Caught in Pocket

Both villages stand on the main Sarraguemines-Zwiebruecken highway and on the bank of Mandel Creek, which parallels the Blies. Between them on the west is a hill which commands the comparatively unprotected left flank of the German trenches and forts defending Saarbruecken. Reports the French already had taken this hill and were shelling German positions from it reached Basel but could not be confirmed.

French control of the road to Wittersheim, however, apparently meant the German forces on the east bank of the Saar and south of Saarbruecken were in an untenable pocket. German troops were reported moving out of a dozen villages in the area.

The suspense which has been hanging over the Western Front for 48 hours, while Poland's defenses were crumbling under the double blow, was broken just before dawn today by the German assault along the Saar.

French advices said German infantry charged in the no-mans land between Germany's Siegfried Line and the Maginot Line at a point just within German territory. The action was at a point where the French have been filtering through the Nazi trench and pillbox system of fortifications toward the important industrial town of Saarbruecken.

Nazi Offensive Forecast

The attack was said to have been executed under cover of a heavy artillery barrage by several German companies numbering about 140 men each.

French troops, who have been digging in as fast as they gained ground in the first two weeks of the war, were reported to have repulsed the attack with machine-gun fire from newly prepared positions.

The main lines of this 100-mile front which bulges slightly into western Germany between the Rhine and the Moselle rivers, was unchanged.

Military observers said the real significance of the attack lay in the indication that the Germans now were attempting to raid the French lines and take prisoners, apparently in preparation for a large-scale offensive.

Balkans Next Danger Point, Italians Fear

either as a "protector" or defender—if the Danubian or Balkan countries became involved. This is Italy's sphere of influence, to say nothing of her big stake in the new domain of Albania. She cannot remain indifferent to what happens in this region.

Rome, Sept. 19 (AP).—Italy, continuing preparations for possible war but preserving her non-belligerent status, appeared tonight to be assuming the leadership of a great neutral bloc in southern Europe stretching from the Atlantic to the Black Sea.

Indications increased, meanwhile, that Italy had no idea of entering the war in the near future.

After the German-Soviet nonaggression pact was signed, Spain recoiled from the Rome-Berlin axis. Now, however, with Italy steering clear of the war, Spain was reported more distant toward Germany, but warm to Italy, despite the fact the scheduled visit of Gen. Franco to Italy this month was postponed indefinitely tonight, "because of international developments."

The first reaction of foreign observers was that the Spanish chieftain wished time to study the full import of the Russian-German nonaggression pact and their occupation of Poland.

The belief was expressed that the coastal bloc would refrain from signing a formal pact. The neutral front was described rather as an "unwritten community of interests," with Italy, the frontal nation, in close diplomatic relationship with Spain, Hungary, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Rumania and Greece.

Trade gains for Italy among these nations have been reported in recent days.

Neutrality Conference

Today's conference at the White House should prove momentous. President Roosevelt will bring together a group of national leaders for the purpose of discussing problems raised by the war in Europe. The meeting may well be the first step toward the formulation of the nonpartisan national policy so essential during this period of emergency.

The conference meets under favorable circumstances. President Roosevelt laid an excellent background for a comprehensive discussion of neutrality problems when he invited Republican as well as Democratic leaders to attend. His inclusion of former Gov. Landon and Col. Knox, the titular heads of the Republican Party, was an especially happy gesture. The important fact, however, is that he has summoned this group of men as national leaders and not as representatives of the two major parties.

This emphasis upon nonpartisanship is the key to the discussions that will take place. Fortunately, the chief issue to be considered at both the White House conference, and in the extra session of Congress meeting Thursday, has already been raised above partisan considerations. John Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, has given assurance that the minority party as such will not take sides in the issue of the embargo on shipment of arms to belligerents.

Mr. Hamilton recognizes that the Republicans in Congress are divided on this issue, as are the Democrats. It would be a serious mistake, indeed, to make an issue so vital to the national welfare the subject of partisan debate or action. The G. O. P. chairman rightly believes that the major problem is to keep this country at peace and truly neutral in action. President Roosevelt had previously adopted that objective as the policy of his Administration.

These disavowals of partisanship should go a long way toward centering the interests of the men who will gather at the White House upon the really vital questions before them. It is not to be supposed, however, that mere renunciation of partisan motives will pave the way to any agreement on national policy. If that objective is to be achieved, it will have to come through concessions to differing viewpoints that will make possible a meeting of minds as to general aims.

The conference affords real opportunity for an approach to national unity. But it will have to be most skillfully managed if it is to bear fruit, as the great majority of the people hope it will.

Dream Of Empire

There was an element of magic in the life of Charles M. Schwab, as there was in the half century of which he was one of the leading figures. The pattern is a familiar one to readers of American history. It is the story of a man who got what he wanted.

He was born to poverty and he wanted wealth. He frankly stated that he wanted to be a czar and, for a time, he was one. He wanted constantly more work, more production and more profits, and he got them too. Through all his busy years he retained a nostalgic love of his little home town, Loretto, Pa., where he built a palatial mansion, distributed charity, paved the highway, and erected large edifices. He once said: "The happiest days of my life were when I had a modest income and lived with my good wife in a cottage with restful comfort."

The great industrialist, who could organize men and machines in such a way as to get fabulous results from both, was himself a simple and genial person. He had a gift for mathematics and music, was well grounded in the classics, and possessed an almost indomitable optimism. All his life he was well liked by those who knew him, even by some who may have preferred not to succumb to his personal charm.

Mr. Schwab's meteoric rise to the presidency of the United States Steel Corporation and his development of Bethlehem Steel is well known. His multiplication of the dollar a day, his first wage from Carnegie Steel, into fabulous millions is likewise a familiar one. Myths grew up around his person: It was said that he tore up a contract for a million a year in front of J. P. Morgan and earned twice that sum. He later spurned an offer of $100,000,000 from Germany to stop manufacturing arms for the Allies.

On top of all this Mr. Schwab was, as he said, a dreamer. He wanted the great steel corporation to be his monument, and in all probability this final wish too will be realized. It will be a monument not only to Mr. Schwab's life, but also to a half century of industrial expansion. But the day of dreaming is over now, and on the monument to a dream, a sounder and more realistic structure has already started to rise.

On The Record

Adolf Hitler's speech in Danzig yesterday cannot properly be considered by itself. To assess his words in that Baltic city at true value they must be compared with earlier assurances, made with the same vehemence, with the same apparent sincerity, and with the same calculated background of deception which is discernible behind the present peace offensive. It is wholly in order now to recall a few of these past pledges made by the Fuehrer to the German people and to the world.

On September 26, just prior to the Munich agreement, Hitler told the Reichstag that annexation of the Sudetenland "is the last territorial demand I have to make in Europe." A few days earlier he had also made this promise to Prime Minister Chamberlain at Berchtesgaden adding, as Mr. Chamberlain told the House of Commons on September 28, "that he (Hitler) had no wish to have in the Reich people of other races than German."

Yesterday the mask came down and Hitler indicated that not merely Danzig but also much purely Polish territory will be incorporated, like that of the Czechs, into the Reich.

In the same Reichstag speech, before Czecho-Slovakia was undermined, Hitler emphasized his "conviction" of a "lasting and continuous pacification" between Germany and Poland. "We do not have to expect anything from each other," he said. "We recognize this. We are two peoples. They (the Poles) shall live. One cannot annihilate the other . . . A state of 33,000,000 people will always strive for an outlet to the sea."

Seven months later, in his speech to the Reichstag of April 28, 1939, Hitler repeated this assurance. "I have never ceased to uphold the view," he said, "that the necessity of free access to the sea for the Polish state cannot be ignored."

Yesterday the mask came down and Hitler promised that Poland, as created by the Treaty of Versailles, will never be restored. Poland, he said, is "liquidated." If recreated at all it will be as another inland Slovakia, subject to Nazi will and Nazi domination.

On September 27, 1938, in a letter to Prime Minister Chamberlain, Hitler declared "it is completely incorrect to maintain that Czecho-Slovakia," through loss of the Sudeten territory, "would be crippled in her national existence or in her political and economic independence. It is clear from my memorandum," the Fuehrer continued, "that the German occupation would only extend to a given line . . . The Prague government has no right to doubt the German military measures would stop within these limits."

The lie has long been given to that pledge, but it is worth recalling in conjunction with Hitler's observation yesterday that "as far as our future aims are concerned, I want to state that our program will effect a general lessening of the European tension." As long as Hitler governs Germany, it must be feared, there will be tension almost as nerve-racking as war itself.

As recently as the Reichstag address of April 28, this year, Hitler reiterated his undying hostility to Soviet Russia. In accepting Franco's request for Nazi intervention in the Spanish civil war, he said, Germany was working to avert "Bolshevik destruction of European civilization . . . for if the subhuman forces of Bolshevism had proved victorious in Spain, they might easily have spread across the whole of Europe."

Now, thanks to Hitler's connivance, "the subhuman forces of Bolshevism" have spread across one-third of Poland. The two dictatorships, identical in their gangster outlook and cynical disregard of all morality, are following what Hitler yesterday acclaimed as "a common course of action." Again the mask is down and the Fuehrer is revealed by the record as the ruthless opportunist which "Mein Kampf" first proclaimed him.

On the basis of a wholly free hand in eastern Europe, with his Communist partner getting the jackal's share of the kill, Hitler would now unquestionably welcome peace. He said so yesterday, in a speech clearly designed both to assuage the deep misgivings of the decent German people and to appeal to the civilized hatred of war which is so strong in France and England.

Nevertheless, there is the same weakness in this peace offensive that there is in Hitler's character, or in the Nazi-Communist philosophies which all now see to be essentially a single program.

The words, like the man who spoke them at Danzig, are wholly lacking in sincerity. They seem designed merely to gain a breathing spell during which secret plans for further intolerable aggrandizement can be matured. It was a subtle speech, craftily designed to bolster morale in Germany while weakening the will to war in the democracies. But Hitler's subtlety will no longer hide the glaring dishonesty of the man.

So it appears unlikely that this carefully calculated plea, half furious threat, half placatory promise, will attain its end. It appears unlikely that it will on the one hand weaken the grim determination of Britain and France, or on the other strengthen the nervous misgivings which, as the Fuehrer himself unconsciously suggests, are already widespread in Germany.

"The Unholy Eucharist"

Once again the word "Poland," so pregnant of history, seems destined to be effaced from the map of Europe. The government of the unhappy republic is already in exile. Adolf Hitler and Joseph Stalin, reincarnating the respective geniuses of the Great Frederick and the Great Catherine, prepare to consummate another of those cynical and tragic partitions once blasphemously likened to the breaking of sacramental bread.

The chief difference between the partition of 1939 and those which shocked the none too exquisite eighteenth century political conscience, is that the fragments will now be larger and fewer, since there is no Austria to claim crumbs from the table.

But whether in three fast and fearful weeks we have witnessed the final extinction of the Polish nation and the Polish genius none can yet say for certain. Since the thirteenth century the Poles have considered their country the easternmost fortress of the Western World. They believe that the Polish knights who threw themselves against the lances of the Golden Horde saved medieval Europe from annihilation.

They believe they were again the salvation of the west in 1683, from the last and greatest of the Moslem invasions. Slavic by race and language, converted originally from Byzantium, the tradition of Poland has been in its way more intensely Latin and Catholic than that of the Italians or French.

To the end Poland represented the vestigial survival in Europe of the chivalric ideal. It was illustrated in the dependence placed by Polish army leaders in their mounted troops and in the reputed refusal of Marshal Smigly-Ridz to follow the strategic counsels of his French advisers. Whether or not you consider a chivalric Poland an impossible anachronism, depends in the long run upon your philosophic values.

But at least it can hardly be denied that the Polish genius has had the defects of its qualities. Polish history, so rich in heroism, has been singularly weak in statesmanship. "The Poles, like the Irish," wrote Roman Dyboski, "have been in the center of the storm, combative, adventurous, temperamental, irrepressible." There is no more stirring incident in all of Europe's annals than the appearance of Jan Sobieski outside the gates of beleaguered Vienna. Yet the history of ancient Poland after Sobieski, like the history of modern Poland after Pilsudski, is a tale of spiritual wealth evaporated by political bankruptcy.

On Selling Influence

Five years ago the influence racket was a major issue in Washington. President Roosevelt had asked Democratic National Committeemen who were practicing law in the Capital to resign their party posts. There had been a widespread outcry against politicians setting themselves up here to "cash in" on their supposed influence with a multitude of governmental agencies distributing recovery funds.

Quite a number of "contact men" and "influence lawyers" were forced to resign from their party connections. Several officials, also, were asked to choose between serving the Government and retaining posts on the Democratic National Committee. It cannot be said that this first Roosevelt purge was a complete success, for Postmaster General Farley still clings to the chairmanship of that committee. But it did have a notable reaction against the employment of politicians to seek favors from governmental agencies for local communities, corporations or individuals.

The sale of influence seems even more inexcusable when the supposed beneficiary is a foreign government. Most citizens will be shocked by the statement of Sam Carp that he paid fat salaries to Preston McGoodwin, publicity aide at various times for the Democratic National Committee, and Scott Ferris, Democratic National Committeeman, as contact men in connection with Soviet Russia's attempts to secure battleships and other instruments of war in this country. Testimony given to the Dies Committee indicates that Mr. Ferris was employed after he had been represented to Mr. Carp as being "close to the President." The Soviet agent said that Mr. McGoodwin was hired "because I wanted a good contact man and wanted the ship plans approved by the State Department."

American citizens may properly sell technical services to a foreign government. But the use of political influence to smooth the way of a foreign government attempting to secure men-of-war here is quite a different matter. The Carp testimony has put Messrs. Ferris and McGoodwin in an embarrassing and invidious position that calls for full explanations on their part.

In the meantime the committee is certainly justified in asking why Sam Carp, who claims he was authorized to buy warships for the Soviet at a cost of $100,000,000, has not registered with the Department of State as the agent of a foreign principal.

Is Nye Representative?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Since arriving in the Capital, I have been somewhat surprised that so many in Washington believe North Dakota shares the views of our junior Senator, Gerald P. Nye, on the question of neutrality.

The truth of the matter is that by and large the citizens of North Dakota feel that the present law is everything but a neutrality act. It is in contravention of international law and its workings since being enacted have been in favor of aggressor nations and a detriment to the democracies of the world.

North Dakota has several hundred miles of boundary adjacent to Canada. Both business and social relations between the State and Canada have always been par excellence. Trade and commerce go on much the same as it does between the States.

The President's "cash and carry" plan is in high favor in our State because it more nearly squares with international law; because it permits our factories to manufacture our own raw material instead of forcing other nations into the manufacturing business and thus eventually crippling our own market; our raw materials are moving into foreign nations notwithstanding the present law, and, primarily, because it gives aid, both directly and indirectly, to the nations whose political aims are contrary to those of this country.

It seems to me that we should think well before we permit a situation to continue which directly benefits the aggressor nations and tends to estrange the friendships which now, and for decades, have existed between the democracies, such as France, Australia, England, the Scandinavian countries, and Canada. We could hardly hope for friendly co-operation should the dictator nations prevail in this conflict. I feel that not less than 90 per cent of the people of North Dakota would take issue with Senator Nye upon his stand, and that his pronouncements are those originating with himself and are not representative of the people of our State.

One must also take into consideration the threat which the present war and a victory by the Hitler-Stalin alliance would have as to Norway, Denmark, Sweden and Finland, descendants from which countries are very numerous in North Dakota and, in fact, constitute a majority of the population. No one doubts their subjugation, economically certainly, and politically likely, should Hitler's campaign succeed.

Casement In Germany

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: How sick must Marvin O'Connor have felt when he read the editorial page of September 2 to find he is the only one who can see any good in Germany and find all that fault in England.

Here is a story from my own brother, a sergeant in the Dublin Fusiliers, taken prisoner in 1914 in the retreat from Mons.

The story is of Roger Casement; the time, February, 1916; the place, a German prison camp. Casement went around asking the Irish lads to form an Irish brigade to fight against England. He appealed to the non-commissioned officers to get their men to enlist. The officers refused and the men ran him out of camp.

The German way was then put to work on those who attended mass the Sunday after. These men had been working on roads, unloading freight cars, and doing carpentry work on old and new buildings, and were now put to work in the coal mines from 6 a. m. to 6 p. m. It was dark when they went down in the morning and dark when they got back to the surface, 6½ days a week. (They did not work them on Sunday afternoon.)

The result was their eyes could not stand the light and they had to seek the darkness of the barracks. This was done till April, 1916, and as the days got longer the hours underground were lengthened to keep them in the dark.

But Casement and his schemes were too much for the Huns. They hurried him out of Germany. He finally finished with his feet dangling over a big hole—hanged as a traitor. DONNELL SULLIVAN.

Russian Aggression

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Japan marched into China "to restore law and order." Italy took Ethiopia and Albania with a similar excuse. Germany swallowed Czecho-Slovakia to "save" the Sudeten Germans from the Benes regime, and is about to swallow a good part of Poland to "protect" a few thousand Germans living there. And now Soviet Russia finds that it has the "sacred duty" of "protecting" its "brothers" in Poland—with an army large enough to take that miserable country and a good deal more territory besides. What monstrous cynicism!

For years Stalin, Molotov and Voroshilov sought to assure us regarding the gigantic army Russia was creating. They swore that Russia had no territorial ambitions whatever, but would defend its soil to the last drop of blood against any and all aggressors (Japan? Germany?). What has happened to this solemn assurance? With a complete disregard for the plighted word, it has been tossed down the totalitarian chute along with Hitler's promise that, after taking the Sudetenland, he had no further territorial ambitions in Europe.

For years, too, we have heard from Moscow, and from the Communists at home, that Hitler and Mussolini and the Japanese were the arch-villains of world politics. We have been told that the peace-loving democracies (always including Russia) must get together and stop these international gangsters before they rode roughshod over us all.

And yet here is Stalin playing the international gangster quite as capably as Hitler. More than that, we find him collaborating with Hitler, his troops acting in concert with Nazi troops in the rape of Poland. Irony may now have the last laugh, for by this act of aggression the Russian dictator has probably succeeded in forging a solid front of all the democracies of the world—but one directed against Russia as well as the other totalitarian aggressors.

All of this has left the American Communists running wildly in circles, trying to explain away the contradictions in the Russian action. They are obviously at their wits' end, for they never can be sure that some new action from Moscow tomorrow will not give the lie to the excuses they are offering the American people today. Of course, they cannot be believed. They are no more to be trusted than the Soviet dictator himself. And Stalin by his ruthless and cowardly aggression has forfeited completely the sympathy and confidence of the western world.

MAURITZ HALLGREN.
Glenwood, Md., Sept. 18.

New Fences

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorials, Walter Lippmann and others have repeatedly stressed the need for unity and singleness of purpose in America, if she is to outweigh the forces of chaos let loose in the world today. The need for unity as a factor for peace is unquestioned by any. But how that essential unity—of will and action—can be achieved is a problem that has baffled many in many an age. Is there a common ground on which all can and will unite?

First of all, it seems to me, we must begin to think in new terms. People can not remain neutral in thought. We must be on one side of the fence or the other. But we need new fences, to run in new directions. The choice lies not between Germany and the Allies; our choice must be between the forces of good and the forces of evil.

Evil forces are working in every country today. Our real problem is to start—now—to wage an active war on hate, greed, jealousy, wherever we find them. The best place to start this battle is in ourselves. Each of us must first conquer the disrupting forces in our own lives and in our own homes, if we would have them conquered in our nation and abroad. SARA L. ENSOR.
Washington, Sept. 18.

Lift Embargo

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been a Republican all my life but I cannot subscribe to the isolation policy of the Republican leaders in the present crisis.

This policy may have encouraged Hitler to start the cruel war in Poland and is now handicapping France, Great Britain, Canada and the other dominions in their struggle to save civilization from Hitlerism.

The Republican leaders say their policy is to keep us out of war and save our young men from the slaughter. They do not seem to realize that, many faults as we may have, we are still red-blooded Americans and will not see brutal might triumph over right.

If our representatives in Washington really wish to keep our young men out of the firing line they will at once decree that we should furnish Great Britain, France and Canada with all the war material and supplies they need at reasonable prices. What this policy may be called is of no importance to us.

ARTHUR L. WALKER.
Dongan Hills, N. Y., Sept. 18.

Disappointed

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have entertained a very high regard for Senator Vandenberg, and consider him the outstanding man in the Republican Party. In fact he has been my choice for the Republican nomination for the Presidency. No one can justly question his honesty, sincerity, patriotism, and ability. His speech at Grand Rapids the other night was masterly in so far as it dwelt with the seriousness of our domestic problems and the mess created by the New Deal; and he was absolutely right in urging that we not be diverted from their consideration and solution by the war.

It was keenly disappointing, however, that he advocated no change in the present neutrality law, and is particularly opposed to amending it so as to permit the sale and shipment of arms, etc., on the basis of cash and carry. His argument in support of his opposition thereto is unsound and does little credit to one who is so sound and intelligent on all other public questions.

School Days

FROM THE WINDOW I could see the little figure patrolling the sidewalk. She strolled as far as the vacant lot and stopped to pick a stalk of goldenrod; a gesture which immediately gave meaning and renewed worth to existence. I heard the screen door bang, and Mary entered the room with her floral offering. She arranged it carefully in the center of the low bowl of marigolds on the dining table, and the tall spray stretched its neck like an ugly duckling in the midst of a brood of fluffy yellow foster brothers.

Outside once more, Mary mounted her tricycle and pedaled slowly, moving with a measured dignity and boredom. I reflected that she had not uttered a single word for a full quarter hour, which amounted to something of a record for one usually so talkative. The smooth and orderly pattern of her existence was broken this morning; for Donnie the Great, Donnie the Exciting, Donnie the Terrible started to school.

Mary had participated in the bustle of activity surrounding her brother earlier in the day, obeying his commands with a new respect. Even her beloved handkerchief with kittens embroidered on the corners was offered as a grand gesture of co-operation, although it was scornfully refused in favor of one of more manly proportions.

With every hair slicked down as smoothly as a dampened comb could make it, and socks pulled up neatly about his ankles, Donnie made his departure, leaving Mary and me to commune with this stranger, this cold gray ghost of loneliness. It was odd, I thought, all the things I had planned to accomplish when Donnie started to school seemed to fade in importance. The house was only half full, and we rattled around in the emptiness.

But now I could do my work in quiet order, and then sit down with the new book I had been wanting to read. There were no disputes to settle; no quarrels to referee.

Mary helped me make the beds, and I overlooked the lumps rather than wipe away the satisfaction of a good deed well done. Upon the dressing table she spied Donnie's new Chinese popgun which his grandmother had brought from San Francisco; she caressed the bright red handle tentatively and then picked it up. I said nothing as she pulled the cork and fired it. She had wanted to play with it for days, but now that there were no attending arguments, the desire seemed pointless.

I suggested that she go out and play on the swing, but the idea found no favor. I pointed out that sunshine and fresh air gave little girls rosy cheeks, but she said that she didn't care about rosy cheeks anyway. My book seemed more remote than ever, when she put on her sweater and went out.

As I settled myself comfortably in a chair and opened it to the first page, the front door opened and she was back. I sent her out again, howling lustily. The printed words were blurred by a vision of the disconsolate little figure sitting on the top step. It was a dreadful world when there was no one to play with, and when Mama didn't want her around.

Oh, well, I thought, the day is young. I might as well do the marketing and give the child a walk at the same time. I washed her face and combed her hair and we were off. What a beautiful day! It was worth living through the sultry Washington summer to have fall come like this. We drank it slowly like a glass of brandy, savoring every drop.

We passed the vacant lot and I stopped to show Mary a yard-wide spider web pulling against a gentle wind, delicate and fragile and yet perfectly secure. The grass was high along the curb, and we saw a praying mantis—that little Tartufe of the fields, rubbing his hands in mock piety.

We walked past the school, although it was two blocks out of our way. I pointed out the windows of the first grade and Mary's face was full of respect. She had missed her brother this morning, and I could look forward to an afternoon of affectionate play, unmarred with bickering and quarrels. School was a wonderful institution!

Home again, I sat down to read my book. I could see Mary's head just topping the low hedge as she rode on the tricycle. For the moment she seemed content. The sun caught the fishbowl in the south window and tossed rainbows up the wall. Flambeau, the orange cat, came in and mounted to the window seat, settling himself where the cushions were thickest. Here, at last, was tranquillity. But the printed page seemed meaningless in this atmosphere of utter quiet. I saw Mary pacing the sidewalk and watched her pick the goldenrod. The book could wait until afternoon, for the children would play together like angels after being separated all morning.

The clock's hands were straight up, so I went out to meet Donnie. A fellow should have a welcome waiting for him the first time he comes from school.

As he rounded the corner, I could see that he held in his hand a paper—his first school work. Mary met him and reached for it, but Donnie jerked it away; it was for Mama. There was a snatch and a yell, and before I could reach them big brother was sitting on the curb with Sissy across his knees.

I separated them, wondering how Solomon the Wise would have settled the matter. Life was normal again.

A Melancholy Fate

TO RISE ABOVE principle for the moment and consider the problem from the standpoint of self-interest it would appear, from the preaching and writing of those who profess to know most, that this Nation is doomed to some melancholy fate whether or not we revive our present neutrality and whether or not we permit ourselves to be drawn into the war on the side of those who represent, in a general way, the American sentiments.

I will take first the proposition of those who think we should, as a starter, help the Allies by selling them anything they can pay for, failing which they will surely be licked. It is admitted that even if we should adopt this kind of neutrality they might be licked, anyway, and it is argued, and plausibly, I think, that should they lose this war, with or without our help, the enemy would begin to crowd us from both sides.

Col. Lindbergh regards the two great water hazards to the east and west of us as presenting too great a carry for any weapons, and he should know as to that, but he seems to ignore the use of political germs by the brown and red Bolsheviks of Germany and Russia.

Hitler's Poison Seeping Into U. S.

HE SEEMS to ignore also the process of political nibbling by which Hitler began his attacks on Austria, Czecho-Slovakia and Poland, a process already in operation here in the works of the mock-patriotic anti-American Bund and the various native anti-Semitic societies. These groups duplicate, with variations too trivial to mention, the political well-poisoners who performed Hitler's preliminary work in the three Christian nations which already have fallen under his dictatorship.

To take the most optimistic view of the pro-Ally element, it is certain that even if the Allies should win they would never be able to pay for the war by any method compatible with the ideals and the system for which they are fighting, nor does it seem worth arguing that they could smoothly demobilize and reabsorb into peaceful occupations the millions of men and women now engaged in war and yet to be engaged in it on both sides. Not only would they be unable to pay us any debts which we might mark up on the mirror, but they would be unable to pay themselves, and for a solution would be compelled to adopt in some guise but without important difference the very views which they are fighting to exterminate. They can't afford another victory as expensive as the last one.

Allies May Win, Lose Their Cause

TROTZKY MUST chuckle now, regardless of his personal hatred of Stalin, at the spectacle of the democracies hurling themselves on the bayonets of totalitarianism in a mad attempt to blunt those bayonets. Yet the Allies had to hurl themselves on them or wait in an attitude of dignified hauteur until the bayonets stuck them. They may win the war, but they will lose the cause, and, on losing it, would naturally find themselves in conflict with us in the same way that the present totalitarian states are in conflict with us now.

I now consider the belief of those who would shut down on war exports to the Allies and attempt to isolate the United States. This policy would just about guarantee the defeat of the Allies, being equal to armies of troops, clouds of planes and herds of iron buffalo given to the Nazi-Bolos with the worst wishes of a free people. Beaten in the field, enslaved at home under protectorate of which the one in Prague is a fair example, the British and French would be of no help to us if the Nazi-Russian monster and, presumably Japan were to turn on the last of the big democracies.

We Lose Ideals When We Fight

IT MAY BE doubted that they would turn on us actively, but would let our system and liberties die of that isolation in a world otherwise dominated by them, assailed from both sides by the airborne bugs of their economic and political plagues. But we would expect them to attack, and with that in mind would prepare to fight, with the result that we, too, would abolish unemployment by absorbing the jobless into the Army and Navy, the gun foundries, munitoni works and fortifications, as they have done.

The American debt and taxes being what they are now, the change over to such a way of national life would compel a gradual surrender to Hitlerian economic heresies, and the national enthusiasm for arms and unity would sacrifice the very liberties which this effort was intended to defend. We have sampled that stuff warily already in the New Deal experiments.

We seem to be damned if we do and damned if we don't, and we, with tons of gold down a hole in Kentucky which, in the New World, won't buy its weight in butter.

Of course, there is still the principle of the thing, but the trouble is that the principle—the ideal of decency, democracy, freedom and truth—dies the minute we make a move to fight for it.

Partial Text Of Hitler's Speech

'Almighty God Will Continue to Aid Us,' Danzigers Are Told

By the Associated Press

Partial text of Chancellor Hitler's speech at Danzig yesterday as transcribed by the National Broadcasting Company:

Mr. Gauleiter, Danzigers and Germans: This hour is not only momentous for you but also for me, your Fuehrer. I am now on the soil which has been German for the past 1,000 years, and moreover, which from now on remains German for all time to come.

At the end of the last World War everybody felt certain in the belief that previously existing impossible conditions would forever be banished. This belief has been shattered by a group of people.

The Versailles Treaty, which had been brought about by this group of people, did not settle a single problem. They came to forget, however, as time went by, that they would eventually face a united people of approximately 82,000,000 Germans. Past events permit us to say that we have lost all confidence in the promises and statements of the so-called leaders of the democratic nations.

One is entitled to think that the criminals of Versailles were entirely bereft of all reason. Our country was the chief sufferer from this Versailles madness.

There is one thing which I must make clear: All the provinces which were taken away from Germany in 1918 and given to Poland were German in the truest sense of the word. Poland was enlarged at the expense and at the cost of the German Reich.

Mistreated in Barbaric Manner

The Poles, on the other hand, were unable to administer the districts they so wrongly acquired. Everywhere we have found the traces of this Polish mismanagement. Poland has never been a democracy. A consumptive, thin, upper class ruled the country in conjunction with pure, unadulterated police power.

Culturally Poland has proven itself incapable of carrying on and perpetuating the noble traditions of a great nation inherent in the provinces which she annexed.

There was a man—a Pole—by the name of Pilsudski who did appreciate the issues at stake, but soon after his death the situation rapidly deteriorated. The German minorities began to be mistreated in the most barbaric manner.

The world at large has been deaf to the injustices and to the cruelties inflicted upon our brothers. For a long time we had to tolerate these insults inflicted upon us by a far inferior state.

In particular there were two principal difficulties. First, there was a city—Danzig—which the Poles—by all means at their command—tried to turn into a Polish city. Second, there was the question of the corridor separating a complete German province from the rest of the Reich.

I wonder what England said France might have done in a similar situation.

Men Like Churchill Want War

Endless propositions were made, most of them utterly intolerable. But finally in my sincere endeavor to save Germany—and also Poland—from the horrors of war, I myself did make certain proposals to Poland, proposals which were rejected in toto. I wonder what the state of mind of the leaders has been since they thus rejected my proposals?

Not only did they reject my reasonable demands but they even tried to make it appear as though certain German provinces were, in fact, Polish. This view was brazenly proclaimed also by a Polish leader who has at this time already deserted the Polish army.

One wonders whose madness it was that so deluded the Polish nation. They were told to fight; they were told to resist; and they were also told that assistance would be given to them if their own resources should prove insufficient to wage the coming war.

I have previously warned against the fact that there are certain men in various nations—men like Churchill—who are able to brazenly urge the advisability of war. My statements were attacked all over the world. The view seems to be entertained in democratic nations that it is permissible to advocate war and to incite violence.

In the totalitarian states, however, it is supposed to be a crime to take merely protective measures.

Poland Driven to War

Until the very last moment I thought and tried to prove that it might still be possible to bring such dangerous men to their senses. For two days upon one occasion, I sat in Berlin waiting for any reasonable reply to my proposals, but none came.

With unbelievable patience, I have tried to solve our difficulties by peaceful means. Again and again I tried peaceful means. Peace could have been saved on so many of these occasions.

Mussolini did his best to assist me in this worthwhile cause, but England failed to see the issue in our light. The English thought—erroneously—that our Reich was still the country it used to be.

But the Germany of today no longer is a country to whom an ultimatum can be dictated.

If Poland went to war it was only because she was driven into war. Poland did choose to fight, but the result has been a bitter disappointment to that nation.

Impossible lies and falsehoods have been told during the course of the struggle. Stories of German cruelties, atrocities—yes, and even of German inferiority. And yet it has helped them not a bit. They have been defeated and annihilated at every turn until they were wiped out.

Batches of prisoners have been taken. Yesterday it was 30,000, today 70,000, and I don't know how many prisoners there will be taken tomorrow.

The German soldiers have carried on magnificently. Our army has not only been masterly, it has actually proven itself a master supreme.

300,000 Prisoners

In this moment of our victory we shall be generous to the vanquished Polish army. In many cases they have fought valiantly. At this moment we have taken approximately 300,000 Polish prisoners.

On the other hand, I must speak to you of Polish cruelties visited upon our German minorities: Feet and hands were chopped off, eyes were gouged out, and yet not one protest has been forthcoming from the western statesmen.

From the beginning I gave orders to conduct a humane warfare. Still the western statesmen must not think that this condition can go on forever. If they want things differently they can have what they ask for.

In 18 days we have liquidated Poland, and now, for the protection of its own minorities, Russia has marched into certain sections of Poland.

This Russian action and the German-Russian understanding have been labeled by Britain as a perfidy. I want to make it clear at this point that as far as we are concerned, Germany will remain what Germany is and has been, and the same applies to Russia.

I have decided that the common problems of Germany and Russia can best be solved by a common course of action. We have come to an understanding with Russia and we have decided that—contrary to British belief—our interests are indeed strictly limited.

The very fact that they are limited as demonstrated by this undertaking ought to make this very understanding a most welcome factor to Britain.

As far as our future aims are concerned, I want to state that our program will effect a general lessening of the European tension.

We have thought that, as far as the West is concerned, peace could be maintained, but certain western interests are opposed to this peace. They tried immediately to rupture the unbreakable ties existing between Mussolini and myself.

It has always been my aim to maintain friendship with Great Britain, but if they do not want this, then I have to answer, as follows: Poland as it existed after the Versailles Treaty will never live again. After all, this statement is also backed by Russia.

The English statement that they are waging war only against my regime, I personally take as a compliment. I am proud to be the object of their attack. Any German regime which would merit the praise of Britain would be in the pay of Britain.

And any Englishman who thinks the German nation can be weaned away from me is downright insane. England may be sure that the propaganda it is now waging will utterly fail of its mark. If they want to conduct effective propaganda they had better first come to Germany to learn a few lessons.

Fight for Existence

When they say that this war will last three years I can only say that I feel sorry for the French poilus, and, furthermore, in any determination as to the length of the war, Germany—after all—will have something to say herself.

This war will never result in the dismemberment of the German Reich. We fight for our national existence. Think of it! England is not pleased by the internal regime in a certain country.

And she thinks this fact alone gives her the right of removing this regime.

They claim that we are making war upon defenseless women and children. We have not done so and will never do so. As to their type of weapons, they are using vessels and ships which, they think, we ourselves cannot employ in a return of these tactics.

However, we may some day surprise them by employing weapons which might not be available to them.

The British war is not by any means directed against our regime but solely and purely against the German nation.

We know what our fate would be if they were victorious. We are told what they would do if the war were ended with a victory for them. They speak of liberating minorities, of the sections they would set free, and of the lofty brows upon which they would set the royal crowns.

Blessed Our Weapons

I feel called upon to express my sincere thanks at this moment to the German people. You have performed and endured bravely. Soldiers, men and women have given what has been asked of them. The Almighty God, who has blessed our weapons up to this time, will continue to aid us.

For the first time today I am in the German City of Danzig. This city personifies the ideals which since time immemorial have motivated the German nation.

I had made a resolution never to enter this city until I would be able to come to you as your liberator. Today this day has arrived.

Through me you are now being accepted formally into the German Reich. We stand resolved never to surrender you again.

Danzig was German—Danzig is German—and Danzig will for all time remain a German city!

Generations will come and go, but they will all look back upon the period just ended as a period of misery and unhappiness.

The Greater German Reich is now united with you. May the Greater German Reich live and prosper!

Sieg Heil!

Roosevelt's Dilemma

By Ernest K. Lindley

Acts 'Short Of War'

IN ASKING for repeal of the arms embargo, the President faces a delicate job of explaining.

The Administration believes that it has the votes, by a safe margin, to bring about the repeal—although an extended debate is in prospect.

The practical effect of repeal obviously would be to help the English and the French immediately through the supplying of airplanes and probably gradually through the manufacture and export of other arms, ammunition, or implements of war.

But the ground on which the President bases his recommendation is of high importance, for by what he says he can define a policy stretching far beyond the immediate action of lifting the embargo.

Many Methods Exist 'Short Of War'

HE CAN SAY frankly that he wants the embargo lifted because he believes it to be to our interest to aid the British and the French by methods "short of war." In so doing he would fall back on his annual message to Congress of last January, in which he said:

"We have learned that God-fearing democracies of the world which observe the sanctity of treaties and good faith in their dealings with other nations cannot safely be indifferent to international lawlessness anywhere. They cannot forever let pass, without active protest, acts of aggression against sister nations—acts which automatically undermine all of us.

"Obviously, they must proceed along practical, peaceful lines. But the mere fact that we rightly decline to intervene with arms to prevent acts of aggression does not mean that we must act if there were no aggression at all. Words may be futile, but war is not the only means of commanding a decent respect for the opinions of mankind. There are many methods short of war, but stronger and more effective than mere words, of bringing home to aggressor governments the aggregate sentiments of our own people.

"At the very least, we can and should avoid any action, or any lack of action, which will encourage, assist, or build up an aggressor."

Two Arguments Don't Mix Well

OR THE PRESIDENT can base his plea chiefly on the ground that the arms embargo is "unneutral" because it favors one group of nations.

The two arguments do not mix well. The first is avowedly an argument against neutrality. It is based openly on the thesis that one side is in the wrong and the other is in the right. It commits us to helping the side that we believe to be in the right. This help is supposed to be limited to methods "short of war." But having committed ourselves to the support of one side, can we back away if methods "short of war" are not sufficient to give that side victory?

The plea that the arms embargo is "unneutral" doesn't stand up. By precedent, by international law, it is neutral. It is neither more nor less neutral than the lack of an embargo would be. It is merely a different kind of neutrality.

Wilson Faced Same Dilemma

AT THE SAME TIME, the argument that we shouldn't change the rules after a war has begun can be answered by references to precedents. Nearly all neutrality legislation here and abroad has been enacted after wars began. Our present law is an exception. In addition, neutral nations frequently alter their neutrality laws to meet new conditions as they arise.

It is easier to answer arguments against lifting the embargo than to present positive arguments for such action within the framework of a neutral attitude. The differences between airplanes, guns, and shells on one side, and trucks, oil and copper on the other side, are unreal. All are essentials of war. So is food. So is almost everything else, as the British and French contraband lists make plain.

There is ground for thinking that if we permit unrestricted war exports we will be more likely to be drawn into war. The Allies have immense cash purchasing power in this country. But if their cash is depleted by a long war, we will be brought up against a dilemma which Woodrow Wilson faced. His choice was between permitting the Allies to borrow money and precipitating a depression in an election year.

Embargo Repeal Foes Called Demagogues

However, there is no basis in past experience for thinking that we are in greater danger if we export shells and air planes than if we export oil, copper, steel and wheat. If Senators Borah, Nye, Vandenberg, and other defenders of the arms embargo would evince a serious interest in controlling the volume of other war exports, their arguments for retaining the arms embargo would be more convincing. Lacking any proposals concerning other war exports, their warning of the danger of selling arms and ammunition and implements of war smacks of demagoguery.

The coming debate over the arms embargo threatens to be a test of relative weakness rather than a test of strength.

On The Record

By Dorothy Thompson

Col. Lindbergh And Propaganda

THAT COL. LINDBERGH should passionately wish to keep this country out of war is not surprising, but his speech in the debate over the arms embargo is. It is surprising and disquieting. The arguments he advances are not those of Senator Borah or Senator Vandenberg. They are much more subtle. For what Col. Lindbergh clearly implied in his talk over three networks last Friday was that unless this country is prepared to go into war with the full force of all of its manpower and resources, the Nazis will win it, and this being the case, it is better not to oneself them in any way. Sentiment, pity or personal sympathies ought not, he said, to influence our cold judgment of realities. "We must be as impersonal as a surgeon's knife."

Col. Lindbergh's whole argument deserves the most searching analysis, and there is not space in this particular column to consider it in detail. We shall do that later. But this column would like to take up one challenge in Col. Lindbergh's speech and accept the invitation to one inquiry.

That is his warning to inquire about the personal interests of every speaker. "We must learn to look behind every article we read and every speech we hear. We must not only inquire about the writer and speaker—about his personal interests and his nationality—but we must ask who owns and influences the newspaper, the news picture and the radio station."

Lindbergh's Stay In Europe Stressed

SINCE THE COLONEL thus raises the question, it seems pertinent to inquire into the personal predilections of Col. Lindbergh himself. For Col. Lindbergh, who counsels complete withdrawal from the affairs of Europe, has not himself practiced such withdrawal. From September, 1935, until April, 1939, except for a brief Christmas visit home in 1937, Col. Lindbergh lived in Europe, and during that time he played a considerable role in European political affairs and exercised a certain influence over European policies.

It is, therefore—and since he recommends such inquiry—important to ask what his viewpoint and influence were.

When Col. Lindbergh left this country in 1935 he did not believe that the United States or its institutions were the hope of the world.

He had performed a daring and, up to that time, unique exploit designed for and inevitably attended by vast publicity, which made him a center of the news. He felt himself persecuted by the press and developed a hatred and suspicion of the press which became an obsession and which is reflected in his Friday speech. He had been the victim of a tragic and outrageous crime committed against his child by an alien illegally in this country. In this tragedy all America wept for him and for his wife with those sentiments of pity and personal sympathy which are characteristic of all human beings so long as they retain their humanity.

Considered Dropping Of U. S. Citizenship

BUT WHEN Col. Lindbergh left this country and went to England he was so full of contempt for American institutions that he discussed with his English friends the possibility of relinquishing his American citizenship and becoming a British subject. In this he was discouraged by his English friends, who felt that Americans would regard the change of citizenship as an affront, and told him that his natural resentment would not be welcomed by England.

While abroad Col. Lindbergh traveled extensively on the continent, studying the air services of the various powers. In July, 1936, he received a medal from the aero club of Nazi Germany, presented at a meeting where he first met Gen. Goering.

At the time the Nazi press paid him warm tribute, and in September, 1937, the same inspired press touted him as a potential President of the United States.

In October, 1937, he attended the Munich air conference, went from there to Berlin and returned to England. He was back in the United States for Christmas in 1937, returning to England in March, 1938.

In April, 1938, still pursuing his intention to remain abroad, he bought the French island of Illiec. The arrangements for this purchase were made by Col. Lindbergh's most intimate friend, Dr. Alexis Carrel, the Franco-American scientist. Dr. Carrel is a distinguished scientist. He also was considered the official philosopher of the French Fascist Party, led by Doriot, until the dissolution of that party by the outbreak of the war.

Statement Helped 'Appeasement' Group

IN MAY, 1938, occurred the luncheon at the home of Lady Astor at which Col. Lindbergh expressed his very high opinion of the German air force and of Nazi organization in general, making reports which were welcome to the group working for "appeasement" with Germany—the group which was then dominant in the British cabinet.

He also deprecated the Russian air force and his remarks were encouraging to those who were denouncing any collaboration between the western powers and the Soviet Union.

In August, 1938, the colonel made his tour of Warsaw, Moscow, Kiev, Prague and Paris. In October of the same year he left Paris for Berlin and made a tour of Germany, including the airplane factories, where he was reported to have been given every access to information.

On October 19, 1938, he was given the second highest German decoration—the Service Cross of the Order of the German Eagle with star. It was presented by Gen. Goering, who hung it about his neck "in the name of the Fuehrer."

In November of the same year he was the subject of an attack in Everybody's Magazine, published in London, which recommended that in the interests of everybody Col. Lindbergh should return to the United States.

Intended To Rent Home In Berlin

DURING THE SAME month it was announced that he intended to rent an apartment in Berlin and settle down there to study aeronautics.

The report of his intention came only a few weeks after the whole world had been shocked by the cynical breaking of the Munich Pact by Germany and coincided with the outbreak of the most ruthless and heartless pogrom which the western world has seen in centuries.

Men, women and little children were routed out of their homes, thousands of men were thrown into concentration camps, a blanket fine of more than half a billion marks was imposed upon a whole community, Jewish businesses were looted, synagogues were set on fire, thousands of German citizens risked their lives in the Nazi Reich to give aid to the wretched victims of an organized atrocity, hundreds sent letters abroad to plead that the action was not favored by the German people, and protests arose all over the civilized world.

In this country men of all parties and creeds—the President, Mr. Hoover, Mr. Dewey—protested. But Col. Lindbergh did not protest.

Apartments and villas were then available in Berlin because so many had been forcibly evacuated. But the colonel's idea of settling in Germany provoked much adverse comment, and he abandoned the idea of a German residence and removed to an apartment in Paris.

On January 7, 1939, he reported to the United States on German aviation. He sailed for this country last April. His Friday speech is his first public utterance on American political affairs.

Fascist Tendency Is Well Known

COL. LINDBERGH'S inclination toward fascism is well known to his friends. "Pity, sentiment and personal sympathy" play little role in his life. On the other hand, he has a passion for mechanics and a tendency to judge the world and society purely from a technical and mechanical standpoint. The humanities, which are at the very center and core of the Democratic idea, do not interest him, and he is completely indifferent to political philosophy.

A man who has never spared himself physically but has taken upon himself the most grueling training, keeping himself awake and without food for days, he has the utmost contempt for physical weakness. Cruelty does not affront him. He is himself a cruel practical joker.

He also is a national hero, and because this country loves its heroes, the press, which Col. Lindbergh hates, has behaved very chivalrously toward Col. Lindbergh's ideas.

But since he himself has warned that all who speak in the present situation should have their personal interests inquired into, he cannot object to an inquiry into his own biases. And his are not the predilections of the majority of Americans or of democracies anywhere.

The zoos of London, Paris and Hamburg have been depleted because of the prospect of the animals becoming lose in an air raid. Poisonous snakes, black spiders and some of the more dangerous animals have been destroyed.—News item.)

A Cobra (as he senses strange activities by the keepers)—What's up?

A Python—I'm not sure, but I can can tell by the way those fellows are acting that there's trouble ahead.

Rattlesnake—I overheard 'em talking. We're going to be put out of the way.

Python—What for? What have we done?

Rattlesnake—Ain't you heard there's a war?

Python—What if there is a war? We didn't start it.

Rattlesnake—It's too deep for me. All I know is that we're going to be done away with.

Cobra—But there must be some mistake. They're punishing the wrong snakes!

Rattlesnake—If they punished the right ones the war would be over in 24 hours.

A Black Widow Spider—Awah! Awah-h-h! There's something phoney going on here.

His Mate—We're the only two black spiders left. They took all the others out last night. I don't like the looks of it.

Black Spider—What of it?

Tarantula—They're doing away with all poisonous insects.

Black Spider—If they're on the level they won't start with the zoos.

Laughing Hyena (having an extra hysterical laugh from the next room)—Well, so long, panther, old top. I'm getting the works. The curator just told me there was a war on and if I got loose I might cause trouble! Ain't that a hot one?

Panther—I heard it, only in a different way. They told me they were wiping me out because, in case of an air raid, I might do considerable damage!

Laughing Hyena (looking over a keeper's shoulder at a newspaper)—Look at those headlines . . . "Passenger Ship Torpedoed" . . . "Air Fleets in Major Battle" . . . "Open Towns Bombarded" . . . "Poles Crushed by Tanks and Bombing Planes" . . . "Heavy Casualties Reported on All Fronts" . . .

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes.

September Is One of New York's Most Interesting Months

NEW YORK in September is really a thrilling experience, because the atrocious weather of August is ended, there is a football tang to the breeze, and that old gang o' mine has reassembled for the winter.

Those of the girls who have been abroad for the Paris openings have returned—this year with tail feathers slightly singed, perhaps—and the week-end farmers have come in from Connecticut and New Jersey bragging about the tonnage of their best radishes and the state of their incipient swimming pools. We are now ready for whatever the fall and winter may bring in the affairs of men, women, fashion, doo-dads, parties and all other fascinating liabilities of Gotham life.

Driving on and off the Island (where we crazy people are hemmed in by rivers) the town seems much the same this fall. Central Park, and the wooded reaches along Riverside Drive, take on the hues of autumn—even here. Of course, tooling up the Hudson these times bring rather strange sights.

On Sunday, for instance, we eyed the big piers where we have had so much gayety in the past few years. But now we saw the gigantic Queen Mary getting a complete coat of battleship grey, and the French liner Champlain was already wearing this new wartime dress. As for the Normandie, she lay supine and empty at her dock, with the crew sent home. For the time, the French do not propose to risk their sea-queen in shark-infested waters. The Italian ship Rex lay calmly in her neutral colors, ready for sailing.

All in all, those piers presented a strangely changed appearance, in keeping with that which has overcome their sailings and arrivals. The net result, Hall and I found, was a keener, deeper nip to the first sharp winds of fall.

AFTER SEVERAL YEARS of conspicuous absence, leopard skin furs are again all over the New York shop scene. I asked a well-known furrier why. He said that most leopard pelts are imported from Ethiopia, and that the bulk of the crop was killed in 1935 as a protection for the Italian soldiery. Since then the leopard babies have grown up and it is pretty much of a leopard year among the local skin vendors.

Back Flaring Town Suit

When misgivings about the weather threaten on the Washington front, an excellent solution might be the bengaline suit, pictured above. It is as smart under a warm topcoat as when worn "as is" with a chic fall hat and furs. This two-piece ensemble is one of the best examples of the use of that old-fashioned fabric, bengaline—which is now made of rayon and suited to smart young moderns. The bracelet-length sleeves and neatly buttoned Beau Brummel jacket make this suit tailored enough for office hours, yet pretty enough for after-office events. The back fullness of both jacket and skirt are modified so that the costume will not go out of style for a long time

Lay Aside Halo of Saintliness, but Avoid Opposite Extreme of Carousing, 'Young Man' Is Told

YOUTHFUL READERS OF THIS COLUMN tell "Young Man,"—who doesn't drink, smoke, dance, care for parties or engage in light love-making—that he can make friends if he will cultivate, among other things, a sense of humor, proficiency at outdoor sports, genuine interest in people, an approachable manner, a live-and-let-live attitude, and a becoming modesty about his virtues. Following is the concluding presentation of a series of letters received on the subject. M. H.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Here are my views as to how "Young Man" can renovate his existence in a "living hell." As a fellow whose life closely resemble his—i. e., high school background plus some college work—I want to say that he must be in training for some sport unknown to the sports world. I wonder that he did not frown even upon the movies.

It would seem that a fellow who has had to "dig" while others played, would have more ambition to "cut a few rugs," than this boy shows. What does he do with his spare time—limit? The success of many captains of industry has been attributed to their out-of-office contacts and social graces. Many of them lacked even the educational background he has. And while "Young Man" may not aspire to prominence in the business world, still it is not necessary for him to go around wearing a halo of saintliness. Nor does he have to go to the opposite extreme of carousing, drinking and smoking. Fortunately for him, there is a happy medium, not unattainable.

May I suggest when he sees some of his girl friends, that he ask them to teach him a few dance steps. Most girls are flattered to think you consider them not only good dancers but excellent teachers. Another escape from his "living hell" could be golf, riding, tennis or any other outdoor sport. Most young people are proficient—at least interested—in some outdoor sport and it is a means of coming in contact with people holding similar interests.

He ought to read a few modern magazines—"Esquire" or the "New Yorker,"—and get a younger slant on life. It will broaden his outlook and give him material for conversation with people his own age. Wake up and live! Interest yourself in other people's diversions. Laugh at their jokes and keep a few prize ones up your own sleeves. You need not be the life of the party, but you certainly can keep the ball rolling. Get on it, not behind it!

FRATERNITY MAN.

A Spirited Defense Of Modern Girls

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: In my opinion, your advice to "Young Man" was sound. I am a girl 22 years of age, have had three years' college work and now hold a job that I'm proud of and like very much. I am active in sports; don't indulge in alcoholic beverages but don't object if others do so in moderation. I do smoke and get great enjoyment from doing so. However, a great many of my friends do not smoke and never have. I cite these facts to indicate that I lead a fairly normal life, including normal contacts.

Your advice to "Young Men" to learn to dance is good advice, and I hope he takes it. Dancing may seem a needless waste of time and energy to persons who haven't tried it. But great pleasure is to be derived from this universal pastime. Dancing is closely tied up with party-ing. And if he would develop an interest in dancing—an active, whole hearted interest—he would be only too eager to participate in young peoples' gatherings.

I fear "Young Man" has no sense of humor. His letter doesn't sound like it. Yet a sense of humor is absolutely essential to social success. It is necessary for getting along with others, and it also helps you to understand yourself. If you have it, you find life well worth living, despite the odds.

Now I come to the important point, namely: "Young Man's" disparaging remarks about girls. Several times in recent months, your column has been used as an arena for dispute concerning the alleged promiscuous attitudes of girls, or boys, as the case may be, when They are out on dates. I have literally seethed inside to see that there are some who actually think that girls are concerned only with "necking," when with boys. (I dislike the term, "necking," but since "Young Man" used it, I reluctantly follow suit. And that reminds me—doesn't he even like bridge?)

I am inclined to agree with you, Miss Haworth, that this poor boy has had the misfortune (maybe unavoidable bad luck; maybe due to his own attitude) to be thrown with only one type of girl. Let me assure him that he is not at liberty to speak with authority on the subject of the normal American girl. In summing up one type of girl, he has cast an unwarranted reflection upon girls in general.

Those of us who are unfairly condemned—and we represent more than 50 per cent of all the girls approximately his age—rightfully resent his unfounded insinuations. Right here in Washington, there are plenty of likable girls who aren't in the habit of "kissing and petting." We have other interests—people, sports, games, recreations. We are leading healthy, normal lives, developing an ever-broadening outlook on the world and its problems and possibilities.

I hope I have made myself clear. And I hope, for 'Young Man's" sake and for the sake of the people with whom he necessarily associates, that he will take honest stock of himself and try hard to remedy a sad situation which, otherwise, will grow worse instead of better, as time marches on. The advice he has already been given is extremely good. It will pay him to read it over and over.

YOUNG GIRL.

Latchstring Out For 'Young Man'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Is there really one clean-cut, good fellow left, such as "Young Man?" My daughter is so sick of men, due to the fact that they insist on familiarities, on having a cigarette every second, on smelling like booze-hounds, etc., ete.

She is a good hiker, rides horseback, swims, etc.; speaks two languages and of course has lots of boys wanting her company. But if this chap wishes to meet her, he may do so, as I (her mother) will arrange it. I am sure he would find at least one attractive, good natured girl who would enjoy a sane man. MOTHER.

Tropical Fish Soup, Says Dr. Tomas Cajigas

Acquired Taste for It When a Boy In Puerto Rico; Made With Red Snapper, Bacon, Vegetables and Much Seasoning

Favorite foods of Washington men are presented in this column.

By Martha Ellyn,
The Post Food Editor.

TROPICAL FISH Soup is a dish that Dr. Tomas Cajigas thinks is deserving of special mention. When a boy in Rincon, Puerto Rico, his grandmother often made this soup. Dr. Cajigas knows just how this soup is made, and the following are his directions.

Take a tropical red snapper, or any other fish suitable for boiling, weighing about 1½ pounds, and bone, boil and shred it. Add 2 grated cloves of garlic, 3 large onions shredded, 3 large carrots shredded, 3 stalks celery cut fine, 1 large can tomatoes, 3 dashes of red pepper, 3 tablespoons butter and 5 strips of bacon cut in small pieces and fried brown. Salt and pepper to suit taste. Simmer for 3 hours. Serve hot with triangles of cheese toast.

Dr. Cajigas although born in Porto Rico, was educated at George Washington University, where he was professor of pathology for 13 years. Ten years ago on September 9, he established his own laboratories in Washington. Photography and reading are hobbies when he is not busy with his profession. Motoring, too, claims a great deal of his time. Dr. and Mrs. Cajigas and children recently returned from a 10,000-mile motor trip through our national parks, and Mexico.

Inviting friends to see his colored movies and eat native dishes, which preparation he oversees, are also hobbies of Dr. Cajigas. From personal observation I can say that he is as thorough with these two hobbies as he is in his laboratory.

On the Social Front

"Are you going to the Miffins' party?"

"I don't think so. Their parties are always such bores. Say, who are these Tooners they are entertaining for?"

"Don't you know who they are? He's here on Senator Puffer's campaign."

"Oh, is THAT the one?"

"Yes, and if Charlie's elected President——"

"Charlie?"

"Yes, Senator Puffer. Well, if he's elected President, they say Bill Tooner will get something big."

"Well, I suppose I ought to go. Ethel Miffin's so funny about things that way. I wouldn't want to hurt her feelings . . . Will the Puffers be there?"

"I don't think so. You know Harriet hasn't been at all well."

"Harriet?"

"Yes, Mrs. Puffer."

"Say, you know I've got to do something for Ethel Miffin. I've been to her house so many times."

"So have I. By the way, I'm having a little luncheon Thursday for Grace Toddy, and I want you to come."

"I'd love to . . . Grace Toddy? . . . Is that the little Mrs. Toddy we met at the Twitter's tea?"

"Yes. Of course, it's not generally known yet, but her husband's slated for a big post in the New Deal."

"She seems awfully sweet."

"Grace is adorable. So's George. I'm also having Josephine Tweedle. Have you ever met her?"

"I don't believe so . . . Is she the wife of Horace X. Tdeedle?"

"Yes—the big lawyer. She's perfectly fascinating. You know everybody says he's very likely to get the next appointment on the Supreme bench—if the Democrats stay in."

"I'd love to know her. You know, I believe I did meet her and Horace . . . once. It was at Lucia Bing's."

"Have you seen Lucia lately?"

"No, I haven't seen her for ages. I feel sorry for Lucia. They say he is on his way out in the New Deal."

"That's too bad. Of course, though, lots of people think the New Deal won't last after 1940, anyway . . . Say, have you ever met Mrs. Marcus Wadd . . . Representative Wadd's wife?"

"Yes. What about her?"

"They say he's really a coming man in the Republican party."

"She seems awfully sweet."

"I was thinking of inviting her to my luncheon."

"But aren't you having mostly New Dealers?"

"Yes, but I don't believe in being narrow about politics. I always have friends in both parties, I'm very broadminded that way."

"So am I. Now I'm thniking of having a series of small luncheons. I thought I'd start off with the Republicans. You know Angeline Portleigh, don't you?"

"Portleigh? Is that the wife of old Senator Portleigh?"

"Yes, Harry Portleigh. Well, they say he's going to have a lot to say about the Republican candidate. She's a very lovely person and I thought I'd have her and a few people like that in together, and then have the old-line Democrats at another luncheon and then the New Dealers at another."

"That's a good idea. I want to have another luncheon later for Estelle Juniper."

"Juniper?"

"Yes. Arthur Juniper's wife. I'm crazy about both of them. Lots of people think that Arthur has a good chance at the White House if Roosevelt doesn't run."

There are so many people I ought to do things for that I don't know how I'm ever going to get around to them.

"Say, I tell you what we might do! Go together and have a large tea!"

"Grand!"

"And just have everybody—well, that we ought to have. Of course, we could have it a little later——"

"Yes, . . . when things begin to shape up a little more."

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

IN TIME, an average loss of 2 pounds a week can amount to quite a discard in avoirdupois. Overweights have been known to take off as much as 100 pounds by plodding along at that rate. But there are a few impatient reducers who turn up their noses at any such "pokey" reducing. They are certain to take a personal satisfaction in the fact that, thanks to the doctors and the scientists, safe reducing has been speeded up.

It is now considered perfectly safe to take off as many as 6 pounds during the first week and to average 2 pounds a week thereafter until the weight is down to normal.

There are several reasons—virtually all dietary—why you can lose faster. One is a high protein content of the menus, to take care of the body's repair work. This protein has the additional effect of slightly stimulating the metabolism so that more calories are burned—something the reducer doesn't mind at all.

Since the diet can be supplemented with concentrated vitamins and minerals, there is no danger of a lack of these elements.

Still another reason that reducing can be safely speeded up is the stress given to exercise. Women used to pin their hopes of a lovely figure to diet. Now they know they must exercise, too, and there are accurate, specific exercises which take the weight off the right spots, firm the muscles, tone the skin and leave the reducer looking younger.

So . . . if you will follow a balanced diet, with all the protein, minerals and vitamins you need, and take your daily stint of exercise, and have your doctor's permission to lose that quickly, it will be quite safe for you to avrage 2 pounds off every week.

Debutantes Take Center Of Capital Social Stage

Tea for Margaret Houghteling Arranged For December 22; Joan McKenna To Make Bow at Dance December 28

By Hope Ridings Miller.
The Post Society Editor.

With returning Congressionals and newcomers to the Capital very much to the fore these days, you might think this year's mammoth crop of debutantes would have a slim chance of getting any spotlight. But it's not so. Truth is, the buds already are centering the social stage, with informal parties swirling around them at top speed and debut dates being set many weeks ahead.

To mention but a few current cases in point: Miss Margaret Stuyvesant Houghteling daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Lawrence Houghteling, is counting on December 22 as the date of her debut tea. Meanwhile, like many other sister buds, she will be busy over school books. She will leave tomorrow for Poughkeepsie, N. Y., to enter Vassar College; so her partying will be chiefly of the holiday variety.

Miss Houghteling, who is known to her friends as Peggy, is a granddaughter of Frederic A. Delano, uncle of the President. She was graduated from Chatham Hall in Virginia, last June. The Houghtelings, who were former residents of Winnetka, Ill., moved here when Mr. Houghteling was made Commissioner of Immigration.

December Debut for Miss McKenna

Mrs. Joan McKenna, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Royal T. McKenna, will make her bow at a dance to be given December 28 by her grandmother, Mrs. David Stewart Hendrick. That's the same date selected several seasons ago for the debut of Joan's sister, Miss Martha McKenna, who came out at a ball at the Mayflower where her grandmother also was the hostess.

This year's bud in the McKenna family finished at Holton-Arms last June, but she will continue studying right on through this season—not academic subjects, but music and languages. She has a lovely voice. Friends say she should do something about it professionally, but she hasn't made up her mind about that yet.

Miss McKenna's forebears include the Warfields, of Maryland, who emigrated to Tennessee and then moved back to Baltimore. She is a direct descendant of Capt. Richard Warfield, who settled in Anne Arundel County on a grant from the Crown in 1692. Thomas Welles, colonial Governor of Connecticut, was also one of her ancesters. An uncle, J. Thilman Hendrick, was once District Commissioner.

Miss Huntington Returns, but Leaving Soon

Although Miss Joanna Huntington's formal bow took place last June when she was the first debutante of the 1939-40 season to be presented, she will be widely feted during the Christmas holidays. She and her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Chapin Huntington, have just returned from Berryville, Va., where they spent the summer.

On Sunday, Miss Huntington will be off to Smith College, where she will enter her sophomore year, but come Christmas she will be very much in the local debutante picture. Her parents are planning a large tea for her on December 24. This event, in contrast to her coming out party in June, will be exclusively a young people's party. A number of dinners also will be given for her during the holidays.

SOCIETY GO ROUND: Lady Rutter, the former Lillian von Matsch, arrived Monday on the Washington, and will be in the Capital this week-end to visit her mother, Mrs. David Stewart Hendrick . . . Accompanying her back in this country was her 10-year-old son, Franz Thilman von Matsch, who will attend the Landon School . . . Sir Frederick Pascoe Rutter, who is still at his estate, Kingston-on-Thames, Surrey, England, hopes to join his wife in this country later.

Mrs. Lothrop Stoddard, who with her family spent the summer at West Dennis, Cape Cod, has returned to Washington and is back at her last year's address at 2011 P street . . . Among attractive newcomers to the Capital are Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Sayre, formerly of Westwood, N. J., who have taken a house at 1644 Thirty-second street . . . Mr. Sayre, who is with the Civil Aeronautics Authority, is a brother of Joel Sayre, the writer.

Mrs. Amory Opens Home On Q Street

Here for Short Stay But Will Return Soon for Season

Mrs. Copley Amory, of Boston and Washington, is in town briefly and has opened her home at 1811 Q street. She arrived Friday from her summer home in Milton, Mass., near Boston, and was accompanied by her son-in-law and daughter, Capt. and Mrs. Douglas B. Smith, and their small son, Douglas, jr. Capt. and Mrs. Smith's young daughter Mary Lou, is still in Milton with her grandfather.

Capt. and Mrs. Smith are stationed at Port au Prince, Haiti, and, though Mrs. Smith and the children have been spending the summer in Massachusetts, Capt. Smith arrived only recently in the United States for a month's leave. He will sail tomorrow on the S. S. Ancon of the Panama Steamship Line to return to his duty, but Mrs. Smith and the children will remain in the United States until October.

Mrs. Amory will also leave Washington tomorrow for Milton, but expects to return in several weeks for the winter season. Mrs. Smith will be in town until Monday, when she and her young son go on to Milton, but will return here before sailing for Haiti.

J. Forbes Amory, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Copley Amory, who also accompanied the family here a short while ago, will remain in the home here for the season.

Mrs. Smith is the former Miss Katharine Amory, who made her debut in Washington and Boston several seasons ago.

Rebecca Dial Back in Capital

Just back from a summer spent in South Carolina, Miss Rebecca Dial, daughter of former Senator and Mrs. Nathaniel B. Dial, is full of enthusiasm for work there in the last season at the Clemson College Opportunity School in Clemson, S. C.

Mis Dial, author, playwright and drama teacher, was asked to instruct at the opportunity school during its summer session. It is a school for underprivileged adults. The ages of the students ranged from 10 to 70 years, and many of the older students had not yet learned to read.

During the season Miss Dial wrote and produced several plays, and her play, "The Voice of South Carolina," was presented by her dramatic class at the school's commencement exercises. Miss Dial, a graduate of Converse College and the Curry School of Expression, is now planning the opening of her Washington Studio of Speech and Personality Development at an early date.

For several years she was connected with Town Hall in Washington and has written a number of prize-winning plays.

Gen. Trujillo To Visit Here. Then Board Yacht

After a visit to Washington, Gen. Rafael Leonidas Trujillo, former president of the Dominican Republic, will proceed to Miami, where he will board his yacht, the Ramfis, for the last leg of his return to San Domingo. The general is now in New York, where he is stopping at the Waldorf Astoria before coming to the Capital.

His yacht cruise in European waters interrupted by the war, the Dominican army officer returned here on the freighter Extavia, with the Ramfis, which is named after his son, following close behind. His yacht was filled with refugees, among them several American friends who wired him to ask if he could not furnish them transportation back to the United States. The general shipped his family home on the Ile de France and then went through France and Spain to Lisbon, where he boarded the Extavia.

His palatial mahogany-decked yacht, which is 145 feet in length, carries a crew of 21.

The wedding of Miss Frances Irene Magnin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George E. Magnin, of Washington, to Arthur Joseph Mitchell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur A. Mitchell, of Riverdale, Md., took place yesterday morning at 10 o'clock at St. Anthony's Church, the Rev. Patrick J. Conroy officiating. Palms and white dahlias decorated the church.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of white lace over satin made with a sweetheart neckline and a slight train. Her fingertip veil fell from a cape of rosepoint lace, with a tiara of seed pearls, and she carried a bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley.

Miss Esther Prangle served as maid of honor, wearing blue satin trimmed with pink velvet and a face veil held in place by a wreath of roses. Miss Marie Mitchell, the bridesmaid, was attired in pink satin trimmed with blue velvet, with a similar veil, and both carried bouquets of roses.

Peter Hogeboom, of Irvington, N. J., was best man, and the ushers were William Magnin and Raymond Berger, of Washington.

A reception at the Lord Calvert Inn for members of the immediate families followed the ceremony. Mrs. Magnin wore a navy blue sheer frock with a corsage of roses and the bridegroom's mother was in powder blue with a similar corsage.

Polish Embassy Counselor's Wife Among Those Rolling Bandages at Red Cross

ROLLING BANDAGES, which has always been woman's work when there are wars, is now the activity of a great many members of the foreign diplomatic corps here. There is a rush to volunteer for service with the Red Cross and several spend hours every day working at headquarters.

Mme. Wankowicz, wife of the Counselor of the Polish Embassy, is among those who are helping out. In addition to all the tragic worries which Polish citizens have these days, M. and Mme. Wankowicz have not heard in several weeks from their married daughter who lives in Poland with her husband. Their other children joined them in the United States several weeks ago.

Miss Sibilla Skidelsky, who returned to Washington with the Portuguese Minister and Mme. Bianchi recently after a Long Island summer, is also working at the Red Cross, and Miss Helen Davis is another who has volunteered her services.

FLORENCE HARRIS and Donald Downs, whose engagement was announced yesterday at a tea given by Mrs. Russell-Bennett, mother of the future bride, had planned an extensive honeymoon in Europe. Now, of course, that has been canceled, but they still have not decided where to go after their marriage October 17.

The ceremony will take place at the Sulgrave Club and will be followed by a reception. Mrs. Jerauld Wright, of Annapolis, will be matron of honor, and Miss Diana Rowland, of this city, will be maid of honor. Bridesmaids include Mrs. Clifton Phillips, of Philadelphia, the former Natalie Keeney, of Washington, and Miss Patricia Newman, of Akron, Ohio, cousin of Florence.

WITH THREE enormous orchids pinned to her black frock, the future bride received best wishes from her friends at her house on Bancroft place. Mrs. Bennett poured tea in the living room.

The first large party of the year is always the most fun, and yesterday the conversation was positively deafening as friends welcomed each other back after vacations. Mrs. John Caswell, recently returned from Massachusetts, wore a smart black suit and a little felt hat with vari-colored bands. The forehanded Betsy has already selected a date for the coming out party next year of her daughter, Peggy Landsdowne, which will be December 21, at a party at the Sulgrave Club.

Mrs. Jerauld Wright drove over from Annapolis for the party, wearing a hat which everybody was sure she'd gotten over from Paris just in time. As a matter of fact, it turned out Mrs. Wright, who is a genius with hats, had made it herself out of a scarf and some buckram she'd used in making curtains.

RALPH SNOWDEN HILL told friends he was so crazy about Bar Harbor after a stay there this summer that he has bought a house at the Maine resort. His niece, Mrs. Royce Powell, and Mr. Powell, were also present yesterday.

Mrs. Kurt Hetzel was talking over plans for the dress shop she plans to open early next month. She and Mr. Hetzel recently returned from a stay at Gibson Island.

MRS. JOSEPH CECIL, whom Mrs. Russell-Bennett visited on Cape Cod for a month this summer, was also present. Other guests included Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Block, Mannix Walker, whose Foreign Service students are all taking their examinations for the State Department this week; George West, one of his alumni; Mrs. McCamey Werlich, back from a summer in Rehoboth; Mrs. Sims Snow, Mrs. William T. Mann, in a good-looking checked suit; Miss Carolyn Chantry, Eugene O'Dunne, Mrs. Marshall Exnicios, Mr. and Mrs. William Lacy and several others.

Notes of Society

Official and Residential

Mrs. Duncan Cameron and her daughter, Miss Elsie H. Quinby, have returned from their summer place in Newport, R. I., and are now at their Washington home at 2539 Massachusetts avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. S. Kent Legare have left their summer place at Simsbury, Conn., and are at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in New York. They are expected to arrive in Washington soon.

Mrs. Catherine Conner has returned to her apartment at the Shoreham for a few days after spending the summer at her home in Bardstown, Ky. Following her stay here Mrs. Conner will go to New York for a few days and then return to Bardstown. She plans to come back to Washington early in November.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Massey have as guests at the Wardman Park Hotel, Lieut. Col. and Mrs. John H. Hinemon, jr., who arrived here yesterday from Columbus, Ohio, with their daughter, Miss Betty Hinemon.

Mrs. Albert E. Berry, of Chevy Chase, has as house guests for several weeks her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. James E. Brady, and their young son, James, jr., of Covington, Va. Mrs. Brady is the former Miss Margaret Ryan Berry, of Washington.

Mrs. Arthur White, of Middleburg, is in New York, where she is registered at the Ritz-Carlton.

Mr. and Mrs. Matthew D. Devine, who have been making their home in Westmoreland Hills, Md., have leased an apartment at the Wardman Park Hotel for the coming season, and have already arrived in town. With them are their children, Michael and Beatrice Ann.

Mrs. Kennedy Arrives in New York

Loaded with celebrities, many of whom slept in the ship's swimming pool, the liner Washington docked in New York on Monday.

Among the passengers were Mrs. Joseph Kennedy, wife of Ambassador Kennedy, with three of her children, Eunice, Kathleen and Bobby. She also chaperoned young Leslie Nast, daughter of Conde Nast, and Robert Craigie, son of the British Ambassador to Japan, who will attend school here.

Senator Robert Reynolds and his daughter, Miss Frances Reynolds, were on board, and so was John Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, who has been summering abroad. He shared his cabin with six other Republicans, though this was purely accidental.

Mrs. Fred Catlett Plans Tea Friday

Mrs. Fred W. Catlett will entertain at a tea on Friday for her daughter, Mrs. Warren Fitz Randolph, formerly Virginal Catlett, who became a bride this summer. Sharing honors with Mrs. Randolph will be Mrs. Roy Proctor Mills, who recently moved to Washington from Seattle, Wash. Mr. Mills has accepted a position with the Maritime Commission.

Alternating at the tea table for Mrs. Catlett's party will be Mrs. Clyde Hadley, Mrs. John W. Childress, Mrs William Fred Penniman and Mrs Alfred Wilson. Also assisting the hostess will be Mrs. Raymond R. Zimmerman, Mrs. Carey Winston and Mrs. Oscar Kreutz.

Polish Embassy Women Form Relief Group

Mme. Wankowicz Tells Plans at Tea; to Make Clothes and Bandages

By Carolyn Bell.

In the drawing room of the Counselor of the Polish Embassy and Mme. Wankowicz—which has been the scene of many a merry party in the past—a group of women gathered yesterday, not to chat idly over tea cups—but to make plans for sending aid to their war-torn country.

Mme. Wankowicz, gracious as always, piloted her guests about the airy rooms, hung with gay red and white drapes, saw that they had orange juice with cookies and explained the project which has just been started this week.

In conjunction with the American Red Cross the ladies of the embassy have organized a unit to raise money for their ravaged homeland as well as make warm garments and surgical dressings, both of which are in demand by a country at war.

Group to Meet Each Week

The group will meet every Thursday in the district chapter room of the Red Cross Building. Mme. Wankowicz is chairman of the unit with vivacious and hard-working Mme. Charamiec, wife of the military attache of the embassy, as vice-chairman. Treasurer of the newly-formed organization is Mme. Paradzewski, American-born wife of the chancellor of the embassy.

A new arrival in the diplomatic set is Countess Lasocki who attended the party yesterday. Definitely lovely to look at, she is the wife of the new attache of the embassy. The blue-eyed Countess and her husband, who arrived here just 10 days ago, left Poland by the last train and last boat to leave the country. She should know the diplomatic ropes, being the daughter of a veteran foreign service man. Her father was Ambassador to Paris for many years. She speaks English with just a trace of an accent, having been educated in London.

Mlle. Paszkowski Among Guests

An interesting guest was Mlle. Anna Paszkowski, a visitor to this country who is chairman of the Junior Poland Red Cross. Another representative of the Polish Red Cross in town, who was not at the party, however, is Gen. Alexander Osinski.

Mrs. Paul Thomas Homan a member of the American Red Cross, who attended the tea, is very anxious to go to Poland to assit in rehabilitating the population. As yet, however, Mrs. Homan has not received permission to go from the State Department.

British Visitors To Be Guests of Navy Officer

Sir Graeme Sinclair-Lockhart and Lady Sinclair-Lockhart, of England, who came to Washington a week ago, will be guests of Lieut. Douglas E. Smith, U. S. N., and Mrs. Smith for a month at their home at 3123 Virginia boulevard, Beverley Hills, Va.

They arrived in Canada from England late in June on the S. S. Aurania and spent six weeks in New York. Following their visit here they will return to London. Lieut. and Mrs. Smith will entertain at a cocktail party in honor of their house guests some time later in the month.

Walter Tuckermans Return to Capital

Having closed Dormie, their home at Southampton, Long Island, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Tuckerman returned here after a few days in New York, where they visited the World's Fair.

With their three daughters, Laura, Ruth and Margaret, the Tuckermans left their home in Bethesda, Md., Tuxeden, the early part of July for Long Island.

Miss Laura Tuckerman is remaining in New York for a short visit with her cousin, Mrs. James Todd, of this city.

Press Women Hear Nye on Arms Embargo

Repeal Would Be 'the Eastern Pathway For American Sons to the Western Front,' Senator Says at Luncheon

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Declaring that repeal of the arms embargo would be "the eastern pathway for American sons to the Western Front," Senator Gerald P. Nye yesterday predicted that Congress, "if not too hasty and if reflective of the public mind," will overwhelmingly defeat efforts to alter the so-called neutrlity act.

Speaking before the luncheon meeting of the Women's National Press Club, at the Willard Hotel, he asserted "the repeal of the arms embargo would mean the building of a great trade in munitions and the creation of America as an arsenal for nations on one side of the conflict. It would be only a matter of weeks, perhaps of a few days, after repeal that England and France would ask for credit; that the 'cash' feature of the harmless sounding 'cash and carry' plan would be scrapped, followed by the repeal of the Johnson act, forbidding loans to countries which had forgotten to repay those made in the last war and the next step our own entrance into the European conflict."

He based his prediction of events, he said, on those preceding this country's entrance into the World War which, he declared, was the result of our commerce with warring nations in 1914, '15 and '16. Only a few days before the actual entrance of the United States into the war was there mention in diplomatic exchanges about defense of democracy, he stated.

Denies Democracy Is Involved

"Democracy is no more involved in the present conflict than American suffrage is involved," declared Senator Nye. "Imperialism is all that is involved, and the urge to help certain nations hold what they got by force."

He did not offer the arms embargo as a guarantee against the United States' participation in the war but said it "insures a degree of neutrality and prevents the building of a great munitions business which is a threat to peace."

Although asserting his sympathy with France and England he blamed both because of their refusal, for 20 years, to take steps which would have prevented the rise of such a leader as Hitler.

Deeper than his sympathy for either country, he said, was his desire that America stay out of the struggle. Referring to the President's call for national unity, he asserted, "If the adjournment of politics means adjournment of the time-honored policy of keeping America out of other people's wars, there are a few who are not in favor of that kind of adjournment of politics."

He quoted from President Roosevelt's Chautauqua speech in 1936, in which the President spoke of the neutrality act act as "a new weapon with which to maintain the neutrality of the United States" and condemned those who, "seeking fool's gold" would attempt to evade neutrality. Senator Nye also quoted the opinion of the State Department in June and July that, if the embargo act were to be repealed, action must be taken in time of peace, or it could not be done without being regarded as an unneutral act."

Senators' Wives Among Guests

Among the guests at the head table were Mrs. William E. Borah and Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark, wives of two other members of the isolationist bloc in the Senate. Mrs. Clark, during the open forum which followed Senator Nye's talk, told of having attended one of the hearings during the munitions investigation, at which someone casually asked whether or not this country were supplying arms to Germany in violation of the Versailles Treaty, and the answer was "Yes."

Asked if such an atrocity as the sinking of an American vessel might be used during the special session of Congress to arouse the sentiment in this country, Senator Nye said such an incident was possible—"a ship sunk without definite proof as to what occasioned her sinking.

Among the distinguished guests at the luncheon was Irina Skariatina (Mrs. Victor F. Blakeslee), author of "A World Can End," "First to Go Back" and other books on Russia. A White Russian, she escaped following the revolution. She came to Washington recently with her husband, Lieut. Blakeslee, who is editor of Sea Power,

Board of Maryland Federation Guests of University President

Luncheon and Tour of Grounds Follow First Fall Meeting; Members Fingerprinted by FBI Representative

The first fall board meeting of the Maryland State Federation of Women's Clubs was held yesterday at the University of Maryland, in College Park. The morning session was followed by a luncheon at which the 60 board members were entertained by Dr. H. C. Byrd, president of the university, and a tour of the buildings and grounds of the institution.

Mrs. Harry Harcum, of Salisbury, president of the federation, had arranged for the fingerprinting of the board members by a representative from the Federal Bureau of Investigation as part of the club-women's campaign for the keeping of personal identification records. This is one of the projects being carried out this year under the department of American citizenship, of which Mrs. R. S. d'Espard, of Chevy Chase, is chairman. All clubs in the State federation are being asked to fingerprint their members and the junior clubs are launching a campaign for the fingerprinting of elementary and high school students.

To Study Taxes As Year's Project

Under the chairmanship of Mrs. Calvin Gabriel, of Baltimore, chairman of the department of legislation, the Maryland federation proposes to study hidden taxes this season. It will also cooperate in Gov. O'Conor's safety program under the leadership of Mrs. Charles H. Thompson, of Baltimore, safety chairman. Mrs. Harcum and Mrs. Guy Clements, of Annapolis, president of the State Congress of Parents and Teachers, are the two women among the safety commission's 15 members.

Another project in which the Maryland women will engage this year, is the observance of the golden jubilee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs by contributions to the foundation fund. Mrs. John L. Whitehurst, of Baltimore, first vice president of the General Federation, is chairman of the national celebration, and Mrs. John F. Sipple, of Baltimore, chairman of the pioneer women's committee.

Each Club Plans Jubilee Party

Each club in the State Federation will select its pioneer woman and will have a birthday party in observance of the jubilee. The State Federation will celebrate with a large party at the time of its convention in April. Mrs. Wilmer Davis, of Fredericksburg, is chairman of the birthday parties, and Mrs. John Gardner, of Jessup, of the pioneer club women's committee for the State.

The council of club presidents will meet with the board in Baltimore at its next session, the third Tuesday in November.

Women Voters Support Repeal Of Embargoes

The National Board of the League of Women Voters announced yesterday active league support of revision of the neutrality act by repeal of the present embargo section and substitution of provisions for control of all trade under restrictions of "cash and carry" or some similar proposal for trade under conditions that tend to safeguard the United States.

Miss Marguerite Wells, president, expressed the wish that support of such neutrality legislation be an occasion for clarifying the issues. In a letter to State presidents, she said:

"Many people still do not realize that the question of changes in embargoes does not mean change in our status as a neutral, which has been proclaimed by the President and could have been proclaimed had there been no so-called 'neutrality' act. Many people also are under the false impression that the present embargo provisions of the act safeguard us against incidents likely to lead to war. The present embargo provision is only upon munitions of war. Incidents are as likely to occur from our foreign trade in other commodities. Putting all trade under control and adding the restriction of 'cash and carry' ought therefore to make less likely incidents that might incite the United States to war."

Mrs. Morris Tea Hostess

Mrs. Edgar Morris, wife of the general chairman of the Red Cross Roll Call, yesterday entertained at tea at the headquarters, 1725 I street, for committee chairmen who comprise her booth committee at the Carlton Hotel.

Those present included Mrs. H. C. Mackay, vice chairman of booth committee; Mrs. R. F. Keefer, wife of Brig. Gen. Keefer, chapter chairman; Mrs. Tyree Rivers, Miss Edna May (Roll Call secretary), Mrs. Claude Owen, Mrs. William B. Young, Mrs. Harvey Jones, Mrs. Ford E. Young, Mrs. Charles A. Robinson, Mrs. G. B. Burrus, Mrs. Ray Bell, Mrs. Edgar Morris, jr., Mrs. David McCoach, wife of Commissioner McCoach, Mrs. G. Elmer Flather, Mrs. Preston Kavanagh, Mrs. William Shearer, Mrs. Boschen (wife of Gen. Boschen), Mrs. Walter Davidson, Mrs. Vernon Lowrey and Mrs. W. N. Rehlander.

Two more sewing auxiliaries have been added to the production department of the District chapter of the Red Cross, the Cleveland Park Church Auxiliary and the Sherwood Presbyterian Church Auxiliary in Woodridge.

Canada Plans Two Divisions For War Duty

32,000 Troops to Be Trained for Use if Britain Asks Men

By the Canadian Press

Ottawa, Sept. 19.—Two divisions of Canadian troops—32,000 men—will be organized to be available as an expeditionary force if and when they should be required in the war against Germany, it was announced tonight.

A few minutes later, Prime Minister Mackenzie King announced a cabinet shake-up in which Defense Minister Ian Mackenzie becomes minister of pensions and Labor Minister Norman Rogers takes the defense portfolio.

Plan Submarine Drive

Other measures for Canada's immediate program of co-operation with Britain include doubling the naval personnel, intensified air force training and construction of a large number of antisubmarine craft.

It was believed the first division of the force to be held ready for service in France would be prepared by the first of the year. The organization was placed on a voluntary basis, with members of present regular and militia forces invited to present themselves for foreign service.

The government's statement said the first aid requested by the British government in response to Canada's offer was the facilitation of purchases by the United Kingdom of essential supplies.

Credits Likely

For this purpose, it was said, it would be necessary to make Canadian dollars available to the British government, probably involving the repatriation of Canadian securities held in London and later the granting of credits.

It was said the British government want naval craft, personnel and facilities, trained air personnel and, in the militia field, technical officers, medical and engineering services.

Announcement of details of the government's war policy followed two days of cabinet sessions.

Pensions Minister C. G. Power was made postmaster-general and Postmaster-General Norman A. McLarty was appointed minister of labor.

Rear Admiral Percival S. Rossiter, former surgeon general of the United States Navy, yesterday took over his new duties as chief of staff at Gallinger Hospital.

The new chief of staff, who succeeds Dr. Walter A. Bloedorn, met the staff at the hospital yesterday but would not comment on policies or program. He was not sworn into office by the District, because he is termed as a "volunteer" worker; his salary being paid by the George Washington and Georgetown Universities.

Dr. Bloedorn relinquished the job to become dean of the George Washington Medical School.

Love Overcomes Obstacle (9Blocks) In City Romance

Just how much distance is required to make the heart grow fonder yesterday was reduced to exactness—nine blocks, or, as a lover might view it, those millions of miles between the District Building and Police Headquarters.

The romance began when Miss Janet Eastburn, secretary to Police Superintendent Ernest W. Brown, and Joseph O'Lone, chief clerk in the Municipal Architect's office, were working in the District electrical department thre years ago.

Miss Eastburn last year quit the District Building for her present position in Police Headquarters. Now a wedding ceremony will be performed at St. Gabriel's Church at 9:30 a. m. tomorrow, to be followed by a reception at the Raleigh Hotel. After a trip to New York, Mrs. O'Lone will resume her position at headquarters, while O'Lone continues at his post—those nine blocks away.

Atkinson Rites To Be Tomorrow

Funeral services for John P. Atkinson, 69, who served at the Capitol 34 years as a messenger and assistant clerk, will be held at Calvary Episcopal Church at 2 p. m. tomorrow. Atkinson died in Freedmen's Hospital Monday. His home was at 209 Tenth street southeast.

A native of Washington, he was educated in the District public schools and was first employed in the Navy Yard as a clerk in the ordnance office. He was a former president of the Oldest Inhabitants' Association.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Ela Atkinson, three brothers and two sisters, all of Washington.

Nazi Planes Take Supplies To Front Line

Wounded Returned To Hospital Points By Air Ambulances

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Sept. 19.—Modern mechanized warfare has made the transportation of the wounded, of medicine, food, gasoline and other supplies an important function of the German air force.

Three special hospital planes, painted white with a large red cross on the side, make regular trips into Poland from their Breslau base to remove the most seriously wounded from first aid stations to hospitals in Germany.

Each of these special planes can carry 18 wounded men.

Huge Junkers transport planes make steady trips to the front from Breslau, transporting gasoline to the armored car and tank units, because of the breakdown of rail communications and slow travel over poor roads.

Crews of supply planes drop their parachuted loads as near as possible to troops.

At the Breslau airport, where these transports base, there is a constant bustle. The Germans are said to have brought 250 wounded men by plane to Breslau alone. Others have been taken to various othere points depending upon bedspace and the type of attention needed.

New Lights Snarl Up All Traffic

Pedestrian Control System Installed At 13th St. and Pennsylvania Ave.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Turmoil was a mild word for the scene at Thirteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue yesterday when Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer turned on his new pedestrian control lights—the first of their type in the country.

Things were in such a jam by midday that office workers in the Farm Credit Administration on the southwest corner gave up sitting at their desks and crowded windows to watch the fun. And fun it was for the bystander—but not for the bewildered pedestrians, confused motorists and harassed policemen.

Matters were not improved by the presence of workmen, trucks and a steam roller. Installation of the new lights called for resurfacing of the street and everybody and everything just couldn't seem to keep out of each other's way. There were more accidents per minute—tangled bumpers, bent fenders, etc.—than the busy corner had ever seen.

Lights Are Unperturbed

But unperturbed by the commotion, towering above the scene on six poles, were Van Duzer's new lights, blinking pedestrian commands at frequent intervals. They were the center of attraction—when passersby weren't dodging falling picks, backing trucks and freshly-painted white and yellow lines.

The signals work on an 80-second cycle, flashing the words "Walk" and "Don't Walk" in bright red neon letters. Most of the trouble arose when pedestrians found they could only cross half of Pennsylvania avenue at a time, waiting in the middle 24 seconds before completing their walk.

Here's what happens: Pedestrians crossing the avenue southbound from the northwest corner watch a pole in the center of the street. They start when the "Don't" disappears and the "Walk" remains. But halfway across, they are faced with another signal on the southwest corner which tells them to "Don't." Here, in a painted safety island, they must wait, continuing only when the second signal says O. K.

"Protection? Huh!"

"It is a heck of a note," said a gray-clad middle-aged man, "this getting people into the middle of the street and then leaving them there. And they call it 'protection'—huh!"

This seemed to be the main bone of contention, although many observers were inclined to "give the thing a fair trial" before passing judgment.

During the afternoon rush hour, groups of 50 pedestrians at a time were stranded in the center of the avenue, awaiting signals. Some overflowed onto the street-car tracks and had to jump to save their skins.

Each time a party of walkers halted to await signal changes, they were lectured on the finer points of the system by policemen.

Busiest man at the corner during the day was Traffic Policeman J. B. Singleton. Between lectures, he raced from curb to curb, directing pedestrians and autos, pausing frequently to untangle snarls and take reports of rear-end collisions and side-swipes. Once during the late rush hour, it took three policemen, two motorists and a street car inspector to unhook a couple of locked bumpers.

Van Duzer explained the width of Pennsylvania avenue—it is 123 feet wide—would not permit timing of the new signals to give pedestrians a complete crossing.

"The delay to vehicles," he said, "would cause no end of trouble."

He pointed out that it now takes pedestrians only 10 seconds longer to cross the avenue than formerly.

"We may make changes—but it will work," said Van Duzer.

4 Hurt in Traffic

A 9-year-old girl was badly hurt in a hit-run bicycle accident yesterday, two persons were struck down by an automobile while standing in a safety zone and a woman suffered a compound fracture of her left leg in another traffic accident.

Dolores Barnes, 34 Pierce street northwest, was taken to Children's Hospital with a possible fracture of the ribs and chest injuries after being knocked down by two colored boys on a bicycle near her home.

Floyd Johnson, 25, of 925 Twenty-fifth street northwest, and Olivia Barber, 20, Arlington, Va., were struck by a car at Twenty-fifth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest. Perry Lamb, 42, of 4482 Conduit road northwest, was charged with driving through an occupied safety zone.

Alice Williams, colored, 41, of 212 Parker street northwest, was struck by a car in the 1000 block of New Jersey avenue northwest, and taken to Freedmen's Hospital with a broken left leg.

Our Town:

Randle Highlands, Growing Rapidly

New Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge to Aid Development

By Christine Sadler

When the Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge is finished and the Southeast tied at last to the "modern" part of Washington, the Goddess of Freedom on the Capitol dome will feel that she has her head turned in the right direction.

So they are saying in Randle Highlands, where the sound of the hammer mingles with birdsongs as the community sits back and watches itself grow.

That part of it, that is, not out working for real estate deals. Figures show the place has just about doubled in the last five years, and estimates are that 60 per cent of the building is being done by the citizens on a "one or two house" basis.

15 Companies Operating

Besides, 15 real estate companies are operating in the area—some of them on a big-scale basis.

Rental vacancies, as the District prepares for its October 1 turnover, are running below 1 per cent. It's much easier to buy a house than to rent one.

To ease the mind of Washingtonians who have attached "cheap" to all thoughts of homebuilding beyond the Anacostia, some of the new homes are selling for $35,000 and $40,000—and really selling.

"It's something we have had to fight for years, our lack of what was considered style," said Charles A. Barker, 74-year-old civic leader who lives at 3333 M street southeast, in the third oldest house of the area.

The very oldest—as far as the memory runs—is that built in 1848 at N street and Branch avenue by his uncle, Sayles J. Bowen, who was once Mayor of Washington and also once postmaster and tax collector.

Cites Northwest Aim

"Government clerks come to Washington making $1,400 a year," Mr. Barker continued, "and start looking for a place to live. They don't care where it is, they declare, just so it's in the northwest.

"They've never been to the southeast, of course, and have no idea what it's like. They've just been told it is not stylish."

A trip through Randle Highlands quickly reveals that's being changed. The worst thing about taking such a trip today is that the bad impression comes early—before the visitor can get started up the hill into some of the most picturesque "scenery" the District has to offer.

The $2,000,000 bridge replacing the antiquated structure that has been the thoroughfare to Randle Highlands since 1890 will make a big difference. Landscaping and safety feature plans of approaches to the span which will be six lanes wide and have 6-foot sidewalks, will put the Anacostia on a friendly neighbor basis with the Potomac.

"It's even more logical that we should have a beautiful bridge inside the District, leading from one part to another, than it is that the Potomac bridges leading out of Washington should have all the beauty," Southeast citizens said for many years when presenting their pleas to Congress.

Capitol Facing Cited

Another of their favorite pleas was: "The town was supposed to grow this way, anyhow. Look at how the Capitol faces."

Reclamation of "Anacostia flats," development of the Anacostia River Park of 1,700 acres, development of Fort Dupont Park, and announcement of Park and Planning plans to build the Fort drive to encircle the city by way of the forts which guarded it in Civil War days—all must be considered along with the new bridge as reason for the new interest in the Southeast.

On a District map, the work being done in Randle Highlands and vicinities north and south is revealed in its connection with the area's future. For instance: Minnesota avenue from Pennsylvania avenue to Benning will be paved this year. This will tie with Defense highway, giving many Maryland inhabitants a better approach to the District.

Since the first half of the bridge is to be completed by December 1, next summer will see a great increase of travel out this way, even while the last half of the structure is being finished.

Also, Massachusetts avenue is being cut through to Fort Meigs, the fort drive is looking like a thoroughfare, and park development plans include the Pope Creek Valley.

Population Growth

Adelbert W. Lee, president of the Randle Highlands Citizens Association, estimated yesterday that 25 to 30 per cent of the residents of his community were men who work at the Navy Yard. Business and professional men are coming to the area in increasing numbers, and there are many Government workers, he said.

He estimates that the present population of the area has grown from 20,000 to 40,000 since the last census and for the most part within the last five years.

Randle Highlands was named for Col. Arthur E. Randle, who became interested in its development in the early 1900's after he had made a success of developing Congress Heights. Once known as Twining City, the section today is roughly bounded by the Anacostia River, Massachusetts avenue, Alabama avenue and Baylor road.

Within and adjacent are many new suburban developments. Mount Dome, Hollywood Park, Skyland Apartments, Fairlawn Village, are typical.

Col. Randle in his newspaper ads of 1905 and thereabouts told the world in big letters that "Dupont Circle is the same distance from the Capitol as Randle Highlands." That's true, only probably three-fourths of Washington will want to measure it on their maps for verification.

The first bridge at the present site was built in 1796, burned by the Navy in 1814 when the British were in Bladensburg, and rebuilt by Congress the following year. This structure was abandoned in 1945 when it caught fire from a steamer taking a crowd of Washingtonians up to "Skagg's camp meeting" at Benning. It was a toll bridge, and after it a ferry operated until the structure now in use was built in 1890 at the now unbelievably small cost of $149,898.

Tomorrow—Summit Park, the only "completely satisfied" part of the District.

Doctor Sees D. C. a Model For Health

Isaminger Talks At Organization Of Forum to Plan Capital Program

A long-view aim of making Washington the model health city of the Nation was discussed by Dr. Melvin Price Isaminger, director, Bureau of Public Health Instruction, District Health Department, at an organization meeting of the D. C. Health Forum last night.

After dwelling on the District's past health situation, Dr. Isaminger said:

"First of all we entertain the hope that the health services in the District some day will be a model for the Nation. In return for investments in health facilities it is reasonable for the community to expect a saving of lives. This principal has already been demonstrated. The community has invested more dollars in health in the last five years. In return it has given a greater health security."

Among plans for the future he enumerated one to make services more available to people by establishing health centers at strategic points in the community; development of a cancer control program, improvement in tuberculosis work and increasing the nursing staff.

Officers elected were: The Rev. Harry V. Porter, chairman; Ray H. Everett, first vice chairman; Dr. Dorothy B. Ferebee, second vice chairman; Rebecca Farnham, secretary; Nettie Brooks, treasurer; Mrs. Walter B. Fry, legislative chairman; Helen Shuford, publicity chairman; Morris Klass, education chairman; Katherine Schindel, finance chairman; Gertrude H. Bowling, Dr. Paul B. Cornely, John Hadley Doyle, Howard Ennes, Ross Garrett, Mattie Gibson, Mrs. Helen D. Hoffman, William A. Maio, William McAlindon and Willard C. Smith, members at large of the executive committee; Edith M. Beattie, Elizabeth Haney, Sidney R. Katz, Mrs. C. D. Lowe, Dr. C. Herbert Marshall, Mrs. R. A. McGee, the Rev. John L. Mixon, William H. Savin, Arthur Schoenthal and Mrs. Walter S. Ufford, members of the advisory board.

Temple Center Now Directed By Miss Reis

A mounting demand for welfare workers trained in church work, and increasing co-operation between religious and secular welfare agencies were noted yesterday by Miss Eleanor Reis, of Chicago, new director of the Temple Recreation Center, Tenth and N streets northwest.

MISS REIS

Miss Reis, African-born daughter of missionary parents, took up her duties September 1 as successor to Mrs. Martha Dudley. The project is sponsored by the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church, the Temple Baptist Church, which will be its headquarters, and other civic and religious bodies.

Age-group interests will be emphasized in the Temple program, Miss Reis said, and while the family consultation service will be continued, the "first responsibility of the center will be toward the children of the neighborhood."

Miss Reis, who came to the United States at the age of 14, was educated at Wooster (Ohio) College, Chicago University and the Presbyterian College of Christian Education in Chicago. She is a member of the Association of Church Social Workers, and has served as girls' work director of the Laird Community House in Chicago.

Night School Classes Begin Here Tonight

Air-Conditioning, Barbering, Plumbing Among Courses On Curriculum

Night school students in classes ranging from air conditioning to cosmetology and from plumbing to statistics will meet tonight, following registration earlier in the week.

White night schools at eight locations had an enrollment of 5,550 on the opening night Monday, with a 50 per cent increase expected within a week or two. At the new Chamberlain Vocational School, classes in barbering and in cosmetology are offered to public night school students here for the first time. Approximately 30 students registered for those courses on the opening night.

As usual in an "office city" like Washington, commercial courses received a heavy enrollment, it was pointed out by E. J. Lockwood, director of the evening schools for white students.

At night schools for colored students in eight locations, the opening enrollment of 2,205 is expected to reach 3,700 by the end of October, C. O. Lewis, director, said. A new course in barbering at Armstrong High School is attracting interest.

Petworth Citizens Take Up Traffic, Transit Questions

Proposals to speed up street car and bus service and relieve traffic congestion were discussed by the Petworth Citizens Association last night.

Use of hand signals by riders to halt buses and trolleys was urged to speed up transit service. Many unnecessary halts by the carriers could be avoided and schedules speeded up, it was said.

Installation of traffic signals at the intersections of Kansas avenue and Fifth street northwest and at Third and Jefferson streets also was urged to cut down congestion. The proposal will be presented to Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer by the police committee.

Members expressed the association's condolences to Commissioner Hazen on the death of his wife. Plans were made for the presentation of an American flag and a District flag to the Petworth Library.

Georgia Avenue Group to Aid Fight on Delafield Floods

The Georgia Avenue Business Men's Association last night debated flood conditions in the area centering at Thirteenth street and Delafield place northwest and voted to co-operate with a citizens' committee recently formed under leadership of Hugh Keiser in efforts to remove the flood danger.

Oscar Felker, first vice president of the association, spoke on plans for this year's Red Cross drive and the group indorsed both the Red Cross and Community Chest campaigns. The entertainment committee was instructed to draw up plans for the annual meeting and election of officers next month. One new member, J. Miller, of the Geranium market, was admitted.

The following nominating committee was appointed: Henry J. Smith, Milton Vollner, E. L. Edwards, Claude Coor and E. G. Wenger. The meeting was held at the Washington Realty Co. offices, 5320 Georgia avenue northwest.

Meanwhile Commissioner David McCoach, jr., yesterday said elimination of flood conditions near Arkansas avenue and Delafield place northwest, would depend on the amount of funds available after the $18,150,000 public works program is completed.

He said indications are that savings from other projects may provide the funds.

One section of the new Piney Branch sewer has been offered for bids by the Commissioners. It is estimated to cost $170,000. However, that section will not help residents of the "drainage pocket." Possibly as much more would be needed for the second section which would serve them.

'The Women' Continues To Throw Off Sparks!

Film Version of Boothe Play Is Sure-Fire; 'Margin for Error' Author's New Drama; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

THERE SEEM to have been no valid reason why so many people should have been so skeptical about the feasibility of transcribing Clare Boothe' vitriolic comedy of "The Women" from the sizzling terms of it stage version into celluloid. The idea probably was that those highly inflammable terms would set fire to the gelatin ribbon unless considerably refrigerated and, if that was done, that the punch would be gone out of the play. On either pretext, the notion was approximately 100 per cent wrong.

BELL

Yesterday afternoon's preview screening of "the Women," in aspic, so to speak, for the benefit of the drama desks and a select group of stylists of the same gender as the picture, conclusively demonstrated precisely what sort of expert adapters Anita Loos and Jane Murfin really are. They have taken the naughty words—or most of them—out of the script, without removing any of the sparkle. "The Women" is just as fiery an item of serio-comic entertainment as it ever was, in an incandescent sort of way, and stands, in its present form, as an even better bit of diversion than it was on the boards. There is nothing in it, save the presence of Virginia Weidler in the cast, to intrigue the youngsters, but their elders will eat it up, as the saying is.

There has been expansion, rather than curtailment, in the bringing of the caustic Miss Boothe's barbed indictment of her sex to the screen. It romps around through a variety of ultra-smart settings that no stage ever could accommodate, even venturing, toward the end, upon the broad acres of a dude ranch on the outskirts of Reno. The introductory scenes, dedicated entirely to comedy and a shrewd planting of the charade's principal characters—provide what will appeal to some as perhaps an overdose of "beauty parlor" cackling, but, once under way, the film goes about its business of unveiling the unfair sex with a completeness that would be devastating were it not so amusing.

The cast, of course, is entirely feminine. Every type of woman known to the sage ethnologist is to be found in the dramatis personae. There are times when it appears imminent that a man may appear on the scene, but one never does, any more than was the case behind the footlights. Yet the play is as much about men as it is about women. We certainly are a lot of suckers!

What Makes Hoss Racing

Ever since "The Women" was previewed in Hollywood and released for general distribution there has been a lively game of battledore-and-shuttlecock going on among the critics, commentators and gossip columnists as to which of the picture's stars gives the best performance. Nominally, "The Women" has only three stars—Norma Shearer, Joan Crawford and Rosalind Russell—but it seems to this obscure outpost that 'he list also ought to include Mary Boland, Paulette Goddard, Joan Fontaine, Lucille Watson and possibly a few others. That, however, is beside the point. Determination of the most telling performance still would simmer down to a choice among the three named in the billing.

To these eyes and ears the star of the picture is Norma Shearer, with Joan Crawford the runner-up. Rosalind Russell, who seems to be "the people's choice" in what might be termed the "fattest" part in the play, permits an unrestrained exuberance to result in almost constant overplaying, which, at times, approaches almost too close to slapstick to be comfortable.

But the whole thing adds up to a grand lark any way you look at it—as you gals will discover tomorrow night, if you have coin enough left to take the boy friend to that midnight premiere at the Palace.

Speaking of Clare Boothe, this eminent and witty playwright evidently has no intention of resting on the two oars she already has in the theater's little sea of hits—"The Women" and "Kiss the Boys Goodbye." She has just completed a new play, the rights to which have been acquired by Richard Aldrich and Richard Myers. It bears the title of "Margin for Error" and will be given immediate production, with rehearsals scheduled to start as soon as casting can be completed. Otto L. Preminger will direct and Donald Oenslager will design the settings. Unlike its author's earlier plays, "Margin for Error" is described as a comedy-melodrama of particular timeliness in relation to world events. Bramwell Fletcher, currently in "Outward Bound;" Sam Levene and Elspeth Eric are the only ones so far engaged for the cast.

It will be of interest to his veteran friends in the business that George M. Mann, one of Washington's pioneer exhibitors and now owner of the Redwood Circuit of motion picture theaters on the West Coast, is at the Shoreham with his family for a week of brushing up old acquaintanceships. More than one of the Capital's present film executives got his start under Mr. Mann's astute guidance.

Those first official films of the European War, brought to town Monday by Paramount News, do not show any of the "fighting back" in Poland, or any of the bloodier aspects of present-day armed conflict, but they do make repellantly clear that war in any of its manifestations still is the dirtiest, sweatiest, most abhorrent job on earth. It hadn't rained in Poland as yet when the pictures were taken, but mud wasn't needed to take out all the glamor and make it a foul business. These pictures, incidentally, are on view at the Trans-Lux, as well as at the Earle and Metropolitan, and are enough in themselves to clinch this country's determination to stay out. Go see for yourself.

Tryouts for "The "Show-Off," first production of the Pierce Hall Players' new season, will be held tomorrow night at 8 o'clock in Pierce Hall, Fifteenth and Harvard streets northwest. The George Kelly comedy will be under the direction of Howard F. Wentworth.

". . . and tomorrow I want you to take the baby to your barber for his first haircut . . . No, it can't wait. You must make it tomorrow . . . What, dear? . . . George doesn't need a haircut that badly? . . . That's right. He doesn't . . . But you do."

12 P. M.: One of Dewey's witnesses against Lepke was assigned a bodyguard against his will." a detective relates at Moore's. "He's a bachelor, and took a girl to dinner, to a show, and then to a night club—but the bodyguard accompanied him to all these places. When the girl invited her escort up for a drink, the bodyguard insisted on going along too. So the witness is consulting his attorneys—demanding that the bodyguard be removed" . . . "Louis Bromfield, who tried to organize an Ambulance Corps here for service in France," a publisher informs at Cardi's, "couldn't get official sanction—but 8 days ago the French government honored him by making him a Chevalier in the Legion d'Honneur." . . . "Eleanor Roosevelt has a new hideout apartment in New York," a Washington official reveals at the Cotton Club. "It's in a walk-up Twelfth street, in the Village. There she meets the people she wants to talk to, without arousing any curiosities."

1 A. M.: "William McMartin, president of the Stock Exchange, went to Skytop Lodge to address the securities commissioners of all the States," a broker reports at the Paradise. "McMartin, who never wears a hat, brought a straw hat with him. 'At last I'm wearing a hat,' said McMartin. 'It's the only hat I've got—and, at that, it's out of season.'" . . . "The RKO location crew which went to the Florida Everglades last week for the Orson Welles movie, was shot at by the natives," a film producer states at Tony's. "The natives thought they were revenue men." . . . "My home town, Fresno, is a great place," William Saroyan orates at the Astor. "Our chief industry is growing raisins, although nobody eats raisins any more. We have a surplus since 1902." . . . "Artie Shaw sold an article to the Sat. Eve. Post and wanted to call it, 'So You Want to Lead a Band,'" a band leader declares at the Swing Club. "He was talked out of using that title because they said it was too corny. Well, look at Collier's—at Paul Whiteman's article, 'So You Want to Lead a Band.'"

2 A. M.: "I won't remarry until this war is over," Tommy Manville vows at La Conga, "because with this war news hogging the newspaper space my marriage would appear somewhere on Page 29." . . . "I like walking with you," the diminutive Bert Wheeler tells Jockey Sammy Renick at the Famous Door. "I feel tall, next to you." . . . "Confidentially," Renick assures, "when I'm with you I feel tall, too." . . . "Katharine Locke," an agent assures at the Gay 90's, "will have the leading role in Sidney Kingsley's play, 'The Outward Room.'" . . . "You may quote me on this," Gene Tunney declares. "I'm for revising the neutrality bill and lifting the embargo. It's only neutral way of helping democracy destroy Hitlerism." . . . "Such excitement backstage at 'Leave It to Me' the other night," an Equity member reports at the Versailles. "They just discovered that one of the cast, working in this, his second show, never became a member of Equity."

3 A. M.: "I was supposed to do this striptease dance in 'On Your Toes,'" Vera Zorina relates to the Stork Club. "I was to strip down to a bathing suit—but the Hays office refused to permit it. So I played the entire scene wearing a costume which is more daring than the one I was to strip down to. The Hays office okayed that." . . . "Harry Kurnitz, who, as Marco Page, won the $1,000 Dodd, Mead Award, now works for MGM and lives next door to Everett Freeman, the screen writer," Ozzie Nelson informs at the Plaza. "Freeman sent his maid next door to Kurnitz's to ask if Harry could lend him a cup of dialogue." . . .

4 A. M.: "There've been so many garbled versions of this story, I'll tell you the truth," Orson Welles states at Colbert's. "Life magazine sent a cameraman to my house to photograph me with my neighbor, Shirley Temple. I phoned the Temples and asked them to send Shirley next door. Mrs. Temple answered: 'No. Shirley doesn't visit men.'"

5 A. M.: "Just before the fight with Nova," Joe Jacobs declares at Lindy's, "Galento and I were playing knockrummy. A sucker joined the game and lost $22 to Tony. I told Tony it was 3:30, time to go to the Stadium for the fight. He wouldn't go, although winning that fight meant $100,000. Tony wanted to stay, and maybe clip the sucker for ten bucks more."

6 A. M.: ". . . and where is that Watch-ad you're speaking about? . . . But that watch is made of rubies and diamonds. . . . Who'd want a watch like that, anyway? . . . Listen, dear—anybody who can afford a watch like that can afford to be late."

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Sept. 19 (NS).—Our preview audiences give the producers a very fair indication of what is money in the box office and vice versa. "The Cat and the Canary," the murder mystery thriller, was so well received that Arthur Hornblow then and there decided these chillers were what the dear public craved. So he has bought "The Ghost Breakers," a Broadway play of a few years ago by Paul Dickey and Charles Goddard.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Bob Hope will have the lead and second only to him will be Eddie Anderson, the Negro comedian. You probably know Eddie better as Rochester, Jack Benny's alr side—the very funny valet. "Ghost Breakers" is papa's hurry-up war entertainment—the public must be pleased and they want to laugh.

"The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex" was previewed Monday night at Huntington Park and early this morning reports started coming in. Bette Davis' makeup as Queen Elizabeth seemed to strike the fancy of most of the amateur reviewers. Bob D. says, "At first I didn't know Miss Davis, she was so completely transformed." Another letter from a gentleman who asked that we omit his name spoke of good Queen Bess getting a sound smack by Essex in a spot where no lady cares to be chastised. He wondered if that was true history, but even if it isn't, says our correspondent, "it's lots of fun and made me laugh." While I'm on the subject, so many of the outlying towns are aroused over Pomona's claim to being first with the preview news, that we are getting reports from every Los Angeles suburb.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Who is Betty McCullough, who has been beaued here and there by Lew Ayres and Billy Bakewell? She is very, very pretty; Lewis Stone is hosting a "Judge Hardy" party on the 21st, celebrating both Mickey Rooney's and Fay Holden's birthdays; "The Farm," the Bel Air house where Carole Lombard used to entertain so lavishly, is now the home of Alfred Hitchcock; Alice Marble is the next attraction at the Cafe Lamaze. She will sing. Ivy Wilson is in the Cedars of Lebanon Hospital as the result of a bad automobile accident; Ann Sheridan will ride a white horse at the American Legion convention in Chicago, but she won't do a Lady Godiva.

Jon Hall was told to be ready to go into "The Fleet's In," for Samuel Goldwyn in 30 days, but we just can't get excited until we actually see him on the screen; Raoul Walsh is in Tennessee buying horses. Hope it isn't as hot there as it is here; the Kay Griffith-John Rogers romance looks serious; Huntz Hall and Ruth Skinner, Nick Stuart's ex, are really becoming a habit.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., Sept. 19.—Two years ago Clifford Goldsmith, who wrote "What a Life," didn't have a dime. He was lecturing around in schools for a milk company, trying to persuade the younger fry that milk makes muscles and bones! Then he wrote "What A Life," which ran 16 months on Broadway. This year there'll be nine road companies playing it. Paramount paid $55,000 for it.

HOPPER

Hear that Andrea Leeds will quit pictures when she marries Bob Howard. Wonder if Goldwyn will give her the same kind of wedding he gave Vilma Banky? That still tops anything we've done in this town!

Russell Hicks plays Shirley's father in "The Blue Bird." In private life he has five girls. He and Eddie Cantor once talked of forming a club called Five Star Final for fathers.

Al Sheehan of the old comedy team of Gallagher and Sheehan will play the grandfather in same picture. That's fitting the actor to the part.

Jane Darwell, who will play Ma Joad in "The Grapes of Wrath," has taken her old 1929 Graham car up to Shasta camp to spend a week, near Mount Shasta, grape-picking to get some real color for the picture.

New March of Time, "Men With Wings," is terrific. Makes you feel safe, but horrified.

Talk about a loser . . . George Raft loses five jobs, his girl and his life in "Invisible Stripes." But in real life, his luck is so different!

They're so used to Mischa Auer's crazy antics that no one noticed him when he walked into the commissary without his pants. He'd lost his trousers in a strip-poker game to La Dietrich. And was strolling around in his long, wooly undies. To get the crowd's attention, he had to give his famous imitation of a monkey.

After a scene for "Little Accident" Baby Sandy drooled a few more lines. "Listen," said Hugh Herbert, "I don't mind you stealing the scene, But you don't have to pour it on ad-lib."

When Director Jimmy Hogan called Charlie Ruggles in for a story conference and told him he was to play opposite Martha Raye and said: "Our title is "The Farmer's Daughter" and the story——" "Don't bother—I've told it already!"

Staggering Reds Beaten, 13-1; Cards Win, 6-1

The Washington Post Sports

*X WASHINGTON: WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1939 19

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

It's time to look at the record, what with the Cincinnati Reds' lead reduced to a mere 2½ games over the second-place Cardinals and the Reds showing distinct signs of being jittery as the finish line nears. The strain of setting the pace indubitably has begun to show its effect on the Reds. Yesterday's 13-1 beating by the last-place Phillies in a game in which the Reds were guilty of five errors ought to be disturbing to the good burghers in Cincinnati.

POVICH

The Reds of September are beginning to savor of the Pirates of last season. It was in September, 1938, that the Bucs were rightly renamed the Jitter Bucs. They tossed off a seven-game lead in the final month when their pitching, batting and fielding collapsed in unison. It is significant that the Reds, in their last five games during a period when they might have taken a commanding lead, have committed 17 errors.

It's no comfort to the Reds, either, that the Cardinals are known as a come-from-behind team, a reputation that the Reds have yet to earn. And it is probably no solace also, that only once during the last five National League pennant races has the team which led the league on September 1 succeeded in holding it.

Bucky Walters and Paul Derringer have virtually been carrying the entire Cincinnati ball club on their backs since the first of September. The Reds have been showing an apparent willingness to fold completely, but that would be too much of a feat in the light of the consistent pitching to Walters and Derringer, who have been a lonesome duo in holding the team together.

Schedule Favors Cincinnati

A two-and-a-half game lead with 14 games to play is a nice sort of lead to have, but hardly a reassuring one, especially with the rampaging Cardinals hot on their heels. And the Reds face four hand-to-hand battles with the Cardinals before the season ends. Those games will pit an inspired club against a jittery and slipping gang of Reds.

Otherwise, the remainder of the schedule seems to favor the Reds. To keep the record straight it must be recorded that of the Reds' 14 remaining games, 4 are with the Cardinals, 2 with the Phillies and 8 with the Pirates. The Cardinals, in addtion to playing the Reds four times, face six games with the Cubs, two with the Dodgers and one with the Giants.

Those eight games the Reds have with the Pirates may save their skins. They have been feasting on the Pirates all season, with 9 victories in 14 clashes with the Pittsburgh club. And the Phillies, until yesterday, had won only 2 of 19 games with the Reds.

The Cardinals seemingly will have it much tougher from here to October 1, when the season ends. Those six games with the Cubs loom as tough for the St. Louis club. Thus far they have played the Cubs only to an even break in 16 games. With the Dodgers fighting for third place, the Cards will have no sinecure in that direction, either.

But, paraphrasing the old song about a sailor, there's something about a Cardinal club when the going gets hot late in the season. They came from behind in 1928, 1930, 1931 and 1934 to win the pennant in the final weeks, a propensity that is well established in contrast to the Reds' lack of fighting-finish background.

Griffith Seeks Rule Change

Clark Griffith declared yesterday that he will speak right out in meeting next December and demand that the American League take action on the rule that permits fielders to deliberately drop fly balls.

Within a few minutes after Griffith, sitting in his box at Griffith Stadium yesterday, realized that three of his Nats were retired by Cleveland's fifth-inning triple play, he proclaimed:

"We'll have a new rule in this league next year, I can promise that. It's a fool rule that lets an infielder drop a bunt purposely and start a triple play. Under almost any circumstances, there is bound to be at least two out, and that's one too many on that sort of a play."

Griffith was talking as the vice president of the American League, the office to which he was elected early in the summer, following the death of Col. Jacob Ruppert.

The major leagues have attempted to remove the possibility of double plays and triple plays on deliberately dropped infield flies by the rule that declares the batter automatically out when, with less than two out, and first or second, or first, second and third occupied, the batter pops up.

But that same rule definitely excludes a pop bunt as a pop-up, and Griffith will attempt next winter to include pop bunts as infield flies.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Sept. 19.—If Joe Louis knocks out Bob Pastor tomorrow night—which he certainly will do if he can catch him—he will have more completely exhausted his field of challengers than any heavyweight since Jeffries.

CONSIDINE

Pastor is the last creditable challenger, but only on the grounds that he lasted ten rounds with Louis in 1937. Lou Nova was eliminated, for at least a year or two, perhaps forever, by Tony Galento. Galento, after getting in a good punch or two, was brutally eliminated by Louis last June. There is no experienced heavyweight in the world today who has not been knocked out by Louis, in the active Bomber's crushing campaign, at least no experienced heavyweight who has shown enough to deserve a fight.

Jeffries had what must have been the toughest challengers of them all. He had to contend with Bob Fitzsimmons, one of the greatest hitters of all time; Jim Corbett, the master boxer; Tom Sharkey, perhaps the most durable heavy of them all and a few other blokes who would be headliners today. But he beat them all once or twice to become so great a scourge that he had to retire for want of foes.

Dempsey Consistently Ducks Wills

Jack Johnson was out of the country too much to give his normal challengers a chance to prove themselves. Jess Willard had trouble with Frank Moran, considered Fred Fulton a menace, and got knocked lopsided by Jack Dempsey. Dempsey found Bill Brennan very tough, got knocked out of the ring by Firpo, and ducked the perennial challenges of Harry Wills. Gene Tunney handpicked Tom Heeney, and snubbed Jack Sharkey. The short tenures of Schmeling, Sharkey, Carnera, Baer and Braddock indicate eloquently that they were little ahead of their pugilistic pursuers.

Because he depends on fighting for his income, and is the first champion who ever kept his promise to be a fighting titleholder, Louis has simply exterminated his logical competitors, or, as in Nova's case, they have exterminated themselves. Dempsey was the last heavyweight who possessed anywhere near the reputation of invulnerability that Louis owns this morning, and even Dempsey had his hecklers, professional patriots and those who believed that he was afraid to meet Wills.

Until it can find some safe place to put the next Louis-Galento fight, and recover from the shock of having the ready-made Nova obliterated, the Twentieth Century Sporting Club probably will begin talking hurriedly about Patrick Edward Comiskey, as a Louis opponent marked for 1941 delivery. Comiskey is a crude young bruiser with a post-graduate punch and a kindergarden brain. His astute manager, Billy Daley, is exercising extreme care in matching him. He has insisted on fifth raters, to date, but progressed to a fourth rater the other night in Philadelphia when he sent Patrick in against Jarl Johnsen.

Can't Lose His Rep If He Hasn't One

This was no tank job. It actually took a week to make this preliminary match, and Johnny Attell, the matchmaker, finally closed the deal by buttonholing Lew Burston, manager of Johnsen, and saying "You say it'll hoit your fighter's rep if he gets kayoed by Comiskey? How can it, when your guy ain't got a rep to get hoited?" In face of this piercing logic, Burston yielded. So did Johnsen, in the first round. And Patrick had progressed to a point where he was now fighting bums, not tramps. Daley has virtually turned Comiskey over to the Twentieth Century Club which, having suffered once, will see to it that he doesn't run into the same kind of blind alley in which the crown prince, Nova, was butchered.

The only other heavyweights remotely clouding Louis' horizon are Arturo Godoy, the rough and tumble Chilean who out-brawled Galento in 1937 (but lost to Nathan Mann); Johnny Paychek, who has caused a flurry in Des Moines, Bob Sikes, an Arkansan who is knocking over Roundheels like ten-pins, and Jersey Jones' new fighter, Charley Ketchuck, pronounced Ketchuck.

When last heard of Godoy was in the Chilean army, the Phillies of the military league. It would take a year to build him up as a Louis challenger worth paying $27.50 to see slaughtered. Nova can beat his way back, if he's lucky, if he improves, and if he'll let his manager and handlers do his thinking for him in the ring. Comiskey and the others are little more than yearlings, whose owners are looking forward to a distant Kentucky Derby. So when, and if, Bob Pastor is removed from the picture tonight, Joe Louis will have fought himself into the wierdest vacuum into which a million dollar fighter ever stumbled. He will have seriously affected his earning power by consistent merit. He could make a million dollars by losing to Pastor tonight, and going back to fight his way to the top again against a series of palookas, as he did after Schmeling knocked him out. But it so happens that he is an honest fighter, and in the back of his mind he has dreamed contentedly of the day when, despite the financial embarrassment of some there would be no more worlds for him to conquer.

Fans See Early End To Bout; 50,000 Due To See Championship Fight at Detroit

By Sid Feder

Associated Press Staff Writer

Detroit, Sept. 19.—Joe Louis makes the eighth defense of his world's heavyweight championship tomorrow night against Bob Pastor in Briggs Stadium, and very few of the folks around tonight thought the Brown Bomber would run into any more trouble than it takes to button his vest.

In fact, although Bob made Joe look woefully bad one evening in 1937, going the route in the famous "battle of the bicycle," the big majority in this fight-hot motor city figured the champion would explode his dusky dynamite this time long before the 20-round limit, and send every one home early.

Financially, the fight already is assured success. A tea party which would have been a good Madison Square Garden show indoors in New York, it has caught on here even beyond the most pleasant dreams of that eminent dreamer, Promoter Michael Strauss Jacobs. "Uncle Mike" had $300,000 advance sale in the "till" a couple of days ago, and is certain the fight will draw between $400,000 and $500,000, with some 40,000 to 50,000 of the faithful on deck.

Bout On at 9:30 (E. S. .)

The festivities start at 9:30 p. m. (E. S. T.), with clear, warm weather promised, and it is conceded by most everyone, even Pastor, that this first 20-round title fight in a quarter century won't go more than ten on the outside. Louis, winner by quick knockouts over Max Schmeling, John Henry Lewis, Jack Roper and Tony Galento in his recent outings, figures he's going to put Pastor to sleep "jes' as soon as I ketch him; I hope he don't go on that bicycle again." Pastor pooh-poohs such talk and counters with a prediction that he'll win—"Most likely flatten Joe in seven heats."

This corner, remembering that Louis can be tagged—Galento had him on his pretty panties only three months ago—and that Pastor is a speedy, shifty fighter, still likes the Brown Bomber to bomb again, probably in the first three rounds. The former New York University footballer has had 25 fights since he dropped the decision to Joe two years ago, and has lost only one of them, but the man who beats the Bomber must come close to matching his punching power—and Pastor isn't even in the same league.

Pastor Rumored "Stale"

Then, too, there's the persistent rumor that Pastor, who has been conditioning himself for eight long weeks, has "trained off," that he is past his peak. He and his entourage deny this and explain he stopped sparring five days ago merely to maintain his weight, which probably will be 187. Louis figures to scale just over the 200-pound mark at the weighing-in at noon tomorrow at the Detroit race track.

In a way, the showing of the cash customers for the fight is a tribute to the champion. This is his homecoming party as titleholder. He has not fought here since taking fistiana's sweetest lump of sugar from old Jim Braddock in Chicago in 1937, and the home-town folks are anxious to have a look at the

Nats Beat Tribe, 10-9; Indians in Triple Play

Wynn, Attempting to Bunt, Pops Up and Tribe Completes League's First Three-Ply Killing; Nats Rally to Win in Ninth

By Shirley Povich.

In a completely zany sort of ball game, the Nats yesterday survived the effects of Griffith Stadium's first triple play in the dozen years and pushed two runs across the plate in the ninth inning to beat the Cleveland Indians and approaching darkness, 10 to 9.

Preliminary to winning the ball game, the Nats made motions of tossing it away in the ninth when, behind Pete Appleton's inept pitching, they lost a two-run lead and sent the Indians in front, 9 to 8. But the Nats were Indian givers yesterday. They took the ball game back in the ninth.

The fellow who actually took it back was Rookie Hal Quick, whom the Indians maneuvered up to the plate by deliberately passing Taft Wright. Quick demonstrated that there is something in a name, Shakespeare to the contrary notwithstanding. He swatted the first pitch on a line into centerfield for a single to drive nome the winning run.

Manager Oscar Vitt's strategy went completely awry in the ninth. After the Indians had scored three runs in a last-ditch uprising to wipe out the Nats' 9-7 lead, Vitt, drafted no less than Willis Hudlin, one of his starting pitchers, as his fifth hurler of the afternoon in an attempt to protect his lead.

Hudlin began impressively enough by striking out Al Evans, but Pinch Hitter Buddy Myer stirred some hope among the slim gathering by rapping a single to left center. Hopes cooled, however, when Aderholt popped up for the second out, but they were revived when Buddy Lewis delivered a single to center. And then Sammy West slapped a single to right that scored the tying run. With Taft Wright at bat, Vitt

Johnny Burke To Defend D.C. Amateur Title

Last-minute developments on the District Amateur front yesterday indicated that the title would return to Georgetown University as Defending Champion Johnny Burke was among the dozen post entries, and Billy Shea, another Hoya senior, paced the practice rounds with a sub-par 71.

BURKE

Burke, back from Chicago where he advanced to the third round of the National Amateur championship, takes over the favorite's role, as the 1937 National Intercollegiate champion and the two-time Rhode Island Open and amateur champion is the standout player in the field of 34.

Claude Rippy, Gene Pittman, Ralph Bogart, Page Hufty and others played trial rounds over the 6,610-yard, par 72 layout yesterday, with Shea's 71 the best score reported. Scene of a local tournament for the first time since 1930, the Burning Tree course is unfamiliar to a majority of the entrants, and Burke has never seen the course. Rippy played his first round Monday.

Pairings of Post Entries

11:15, S. R. Fletcher, Capital, and Everett Johnson, Beaver Dam; 11:28, E. T. Searls, Indian Spring, and D. E. Mattison, Beaver Dam, 1; John Burke, Capital, and J. R. Miller, Beaver Dam; 1:05, H. E. Deal, Capital, and Billy Roebelle, Beaver Dam; 1:10, George Bernart, Capital, and J. E. McClure, Burning Tree; 1:15, W. W. Smith, Manor, and L. G. Pray, Manor; 1:20, Turner Smith and Robert Bilckle, of Belhaven.

Krakauskas Faces HarderHereToday

Joe Krakauskas today will attempt to stretch the Nats' current winning streak to three straight when he faces the Cleveland Indians in the second game of the series at Griffith Stadium.

Manager Oscar Vitt will pitch his right-handed ace, Mel Harder.

Impressed with the three hits made yesterday by Elmer Gedeon, Manager Bucky Harris will continue to play the long-legged rookie in centerfield. Jimmy Bloodworth, discharged yesterday from a local hospital after being treated for a throat ailment, is not expected to return to the Nats' line-up until the end of the week.

Indianapolis Even With Louisville

Indianapolis, Sept. 19 (AP).—Batting of Allen Hunt, 25-year-old left fielder, helped Indianapolis to a 3-to-1 baseball victory over the Louisville Colonels here tonight and put the two American Association teams even at a game apiece in their final Shaughnessy play-off series.

The clubs go to Louisville for three games starting tomorrow night and return here next week-end for two more should the series run the limit of seven. The winner meets the International League play-off champion in the Little World Series.

Hunt batted in all Indianapolis' runs with two doubles.

Spirit of Shotput Record Holder Is Surprise to Coaches

By Jack Munhall.

A weight thrower of Olympic possibilities after his record shotput heave at the N. Y. A. C. games the other evening, Al Blozis, Georgetown's gigantic sophomore tackle now is creating a sensation on the gridiron at the Hilltop.

In recent practice this 20-year-old youngster who stands 6 feet 6 inches and weighs nearly 240 pounds, has been making such rapid strides that Coach Jack Hagerty and his assistants see in him one of the greatest prospects to turn up at Georgetown in many a year.

Blessed with prodigious strength, Blozis also is surprisingly agile for his bulk and what is even more important in a football way, he has a winning spirit and a natural love for the tough going.

Fire Is Unusual

"That is what I like most about the kid," Line Coach Mush Dubofsky was saying yesterday as he watched Blozis tear great holes in the opposing line. "Seldom do you find exceptionally big and strong fellows with as much fire and spirit as that Blozis has.

"Do you know the other kids don't like to work against him. He's rough and tough, I'll tell you, and he never pulls his punches. We've got to keep him in check during interquad scrimmages or he's liable to kill somebody. The other day he threw a block into some guy that could be heard all over the field.

Another reason that Blozis, who holds the national junior shotput

Five Errors Help Phillies Halt Leaders

Ragged Work Offsets 6-Hit Job by Higbe; Redbirds Turn Back Brooklyn to Gain

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, Sept. 19.—Defense shattered, pitching gone haywire and their attack missing, the top-flight Reds took a 13-to-1 drubbing today at the hands of cellar-dwelling Philadelphia.

The Cardinals turned back the Dodgers, 6-2, at St. Louis to cut Cincinnati's lead to 2½ games.

Walter Higbe's 6-hit hurling alone might have spelled victory for Doc Prothero's men, but five errors—which ran the Reds' total to 17 in five games in the last three days—played a major part in the slaughter in which the Phils were away to a 5-run lead in the first before a man was out.

For Johnny Vander Meer, it was his ninth defeat. No sooner did he start the game than Johnny Niggeling began his warm-up chores. He was in the nick of time, too, for Vandy walked Roy Hughes, first up, then the first of three muffs by Myers and Marty's single loaded the bases. Last year's double no-hit hero threw three wide ones to Arnovich, and headed for the showers. Niggeling, taking over, completed the job, forcing in a run, and was touched as well by Suhr, who doubled for three more and tallied himself on Myers' second bobble.

Hughes, playing before hometown folk, showed them how 'twas done, accumulating three walks, a triple and two singles for a perfect day at the plate.

Higbe never was in trouble. He struck out seven and walked but two, while Niggeling and Hank Johnson, who relieved in the fifth, fanned four between them and walked as many.

The Reds' lone tally was chalked when Gamble, first up in the eighth, tripled for his team's only extra-base blow, and came in on Joost's sacrifice.

Cards Defeat Dodgers And Gain Full Game

St. Louis, Sept. 19 (AP).—The second-place Cardinals cut a full game off the Cincinnati Reds' National League lead by routing the Brooklyn Dodgers today, 6 to 1. The victory brought the Cards up 2½ games behind the league leaders.

Max Lanier, rookie left-hander, won his first decision of the season in holding Brooklyn to five hits, distributed over as many innings. The Cards got one run off Vito Tamulis in the third, chased him to the showers with a three-run rally in the fourth and picked up single runs in the sixth and eighth frames.

Jimmy Brown led the winners' 14-hit attack with four singles.

Champs Hit in Only 3 Innings but Make Them Count; Chicago Gets Seven Safeties

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 19.—Though they hit safely in only three innings and got only seven blows in all, the champion Yankees made good use of all their hits today to top the Chicago White Sox, 6-2, and notch their 100th triumph of the season.

Hildebrand

Charley Keller led off against Southpaw Ed Smith in the first with his tenth home run, and in the fifth the Yanks got to Smith for three more tallies on Crosetti's double, singles by Hildebrand, Powell and Keller, and a base on balls.

Smith was lifted for a pinch-hitter in the seventh, when the Sox scored both their runs, and the Yanks finished off with two more in the eighth off Johnny Rigney. This rally included DiMaggio's second single of the afternoon.

Hildebrand, who gave up only three hits through the first six innings, gave up seven in all. It was his ninth victory.

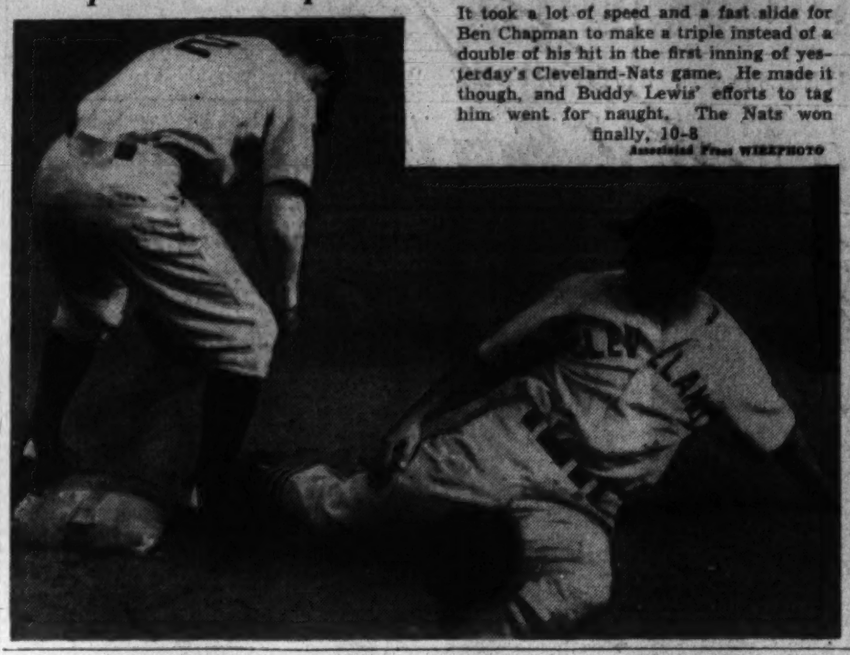
Speed Gives Chapman an Extra Base in Nat Game



It took a lot of speed and a fast slide for Ben Chapman to make a triple instead of a double of his hit in the first inning of yesterday's Cleveland-Nats game. He made it though, and Buddy Lewis' efforts to tag him went for naught. The Nats won finally, 10-8

2-Run Homer Beats Boston For Bucs, 5-3

Pittsburgh, Sept. 19.—Rookie Bob Elliott's home run with one on in the fifth inning gave Pittsburgh a 5-to-3 victory today over Boston before 702 fans.

Paul Waner, making a late but spectacular drive for his fourth batting championship, singled and tripled to bring his string of hitting to 20 consecutive games. His .335 average now is second to Johnny Mize, who is trying for his first title and coasting about 16 points ahead of Waner.

Johnny Cooney's bat, which banged out three hits, helped chase big Max Butcher early in the game, Rip Sewell finishing and winning.

Rochester Beats Bears, 2-0, for 2-Game Cup Lead

By the Associated Press

Rochester, N. Y., Sept. 19.—Si Johnson, veteran right hander, allowed the Newark Bears but four hits as the Rochester Red Wings captured their second straight victory, 2 to 0, in the finals of the International League Governor's Cup Play-offs here tonight. Harry Davis, Wing first sacker, clouted a home run with nobody aboard in the fourth.

The win enabled Rochester to take a 2-0 lead in the series which will be resumed in Newark tomorrow night.

Johnson turned in one of his best pitching performances of the season, retiring the Newark side in order on strikes in the ninth inning. George Washburn, opposing hurler, gave up only six hits, but Davis' homer in the fourth proved to be the deciding margin. Washburn also furnished the Wings their other score in the eighth, when George Kurowski romped home from third after a wild pitch which gave Jack Sturdy a walk.

Error Helps Cubs Nose Out Giants, 3-2

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Sept. 19.—A third strike that got away from Catcher Harry Danning enabled the Cubs to nose out the New York Giants today, 3 to 2, and hold third place safe against the threat by the Brooklyn Dodgers.

That missed third strike put Larry French on base for the Cubs in the seventh, and a balk by Harry Gumbert, Giant right-hander, sent him on to second. From there he crossed the plate with the deciding run when Billy Herman rapped a single to center.

But French needed a smart piece of relief pitching by old Charley Root to save the day. Root entered the game in the eighth with one run in for the Giants, one out and the bases loaded. He forced Pinch Hitter Mel Ott to pop up, and then fanned Johnny McCarthy, another pinch hitter.

Triple Play Fails to Help Indians Win

ordered him deliberately passed to bring Rookie Quick to the plate. That proved to be a fatal mistake.

Paradoxically, it was in the inning that the Nats scored their most runs—three in the fifth—that the Indians recorded the American League's first triple play of the season. They executed it on a bunt by the grace of Rookie Pitcher Early Wynn's bush league base-running or, rather, lack of it.

Jimmy Vernon was on second base and Al Evans on first with none out, when Wynn attempted to bunt. His effort was a mild pop to Third Baseman Ken Keltner who, noting that Wynn was not running, deliberately dropped the ball and then rifled it to Bordeau, who tagged Vernon at second base. Evans, rooted to first, was tagged out by Grimes, who took a throw from Bordeau and then had plenty of time to step on the bag and also retire Wynn, who was merely loping to first with his bat in his hand.

Wynn pitched six and one-third innings before he was withdrawn in the seventh when the Indians threatened to wipe out completely the Nats' 7-4 lead. Alex Alexandra quelled the rally at that point and in the last two innings Appleton almost pitched the game away.

The Nats batted Harry Eisenstat out in the midst of their three-run uprising in the fifth, and Vitt sent Broaca, Stromme and Dobson to the box before finally turning the pitching over to Hudlin in the ninth.

A pair of wild pitches and Campbell's triple enabled the Indians to drive Wynn out of the box in the seventh and cut the Nats lead to 7-6, but in the same inning the Nats reclaimed the run on three bases on balls issued by Rookie Stromme.

Trailing, 8-6, going into the ninth, the Indians became obstreperous against Appleton with one out. Chapman walked, Keltner singled to left, and the score was tied at 8-8. A bit later, Hemsley singled to right, and the Indians had the 9-8 lead they couldn't hold.

Newsom Hurls Shutout For Six Innings; A's Blast Him in Seventh

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Sept. 19.—The Detroit Tigers piled on Nelson Potter in the last two innings today to defeat the Athletics, 8 to 4.

Buck Newsom, seeking his eighteenth win, had a 3-0 shutout for six innings but the Athletics kayoed him in the seventh with a four-run attack featured by Sam Chapman's two-run homer.

In the eighth, Rudy York's single with the bases filled drove in two runs and in the final inning the Tigers scored three more, two on Hank Greenberg's thirtieth four-bagger of the year.

Execution of Plays Stressed at Chicago

Chicago, Sept. 19 (AP).—Coach Clark Shaughnessy stressed play execution today as Chicago's Maroons engaged in their first scrimmage, a light one in which no tackling was involved. Three letter winners, Johnny Davenport, Lou Letis and Bob Howard, and a junior, Bob Jampolis, made up the varsity backfield. Howard is a converted lineman.

Man of the Month

By Walter Johnson.

WJSV Staff Baseball Announcer

(Following each game by the Washington Club, Walter Johnson distributes among the Nats ten points of merit, based on their performances for the day. At the end of each month, the Washington player boasting the greatest number of points is designated as the Nats' "Man of the Month" and receives a trophy from The Washington Post.)

Buddy Lewis moved into a triple tie with Johnny Weisj and Ken Chase for the lead in the Man of the Month contest yesterday. Points on the basis of yesterday's performances against the Indians were distributed as follows:

To Lewis, four points, because his home run with a man on base in the opening inning tied the game at 2-2, and because his single in the ninth figured in the tying and winning runs.

To Hal Quick, three points, because his single in the ninth broke up the ball game.

To Sammy West, two points, because his single drove home the tying run with two out in the ninth.

To Buddy Myer, one point, because his pinch hit opened the winning rally in the ninth. The totals:

Ken Chase	19	Bobby Estalella	6
Buddy Lewis	19	Rick Ferrell	6
Johnny Weisj	19	Morris Aderholt	6

Banks Swamped for Certified Checks as Reds Open Seat Sale

Cincinnati Hasn't Conceded Victory Yet But Opens Series Office Anyhow

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, Sept. 19.—No sooner had the Cincinnati baseball club announced today that World Series reservations were receivable than lines formed in banks all over town to satisfy a requirement that only bank-certified checks would be accepted.

"We're snowed under," reported one banker as he scanned a line reaching from his desk to the door.

Conceding that "the National League pennant race has not yet been decided," the baseball club announced that $16.95 would buy one ticket to each of three games that may be played here on the heels of two in New York. If the fifth game is unnecessary, the club will refund a proportionate part of the money "after the series."

Tickets will be limited to two to a customer.

Box seats "are priced at $20.40 per strip of three," said the announcement, but added quickly:

"None will be available to the general public because the supply will have been exhausted by allotments to season box holders, players, visiting clubs, other baseball clubs, press and officials."

Match With Singh For Top Groaner On Arena Program

Whether he likes it or not, the mat man who makes the best showing on tomorrow night's groan and grunt card at Turner's Arena may be stuck with a bout with Nanjo Singh, the fearful Hindu with the "Cobra Clutch."

Perhaps tiring a bit of finding opponents for the swarthy "Clutcher," Joe Turner, wrestling empresario, yesterday announced that Nanjo's next foe would be taken from tomorrow's program. The choice will be made on real wrestling merit, whatever that is.

Nanjo himself will be on the card, and there is the possibility he will prove to be his own opponent. He meets Ernie Dusek, the third member of the "Riot Squad" he has faced in the last few months, in the headliner, and the simi-windup brings together Bob Waner, a 230-pound Norwegian, and Ralph Garibaldi.

In other bouts Bibber McCoy takes on Rudy Strongberg, Jack Hader meets Joe Campbell and John Katan and Ernie Powers come to grips.

Harry Cooke Signed As Ice Palace Pro

Harry Cook, New York's youthful table tennis sensation, who recently captured the Canadian National Open championship, has been signed as assistant professional and instructor at the Chevy Chase Ice Palace, James F. Hogan, general manager announced yesterday.

Cook will assist Stanley Fields, manager of the Ice Palace table tennis department and No. 1 ranking player in the District of Columbia.

Two Upsets Mark Women's Golf Club Championship Play

Washington Medalist, Champ Lose

Marion Brown Wins At Manor, Forfeits Indian Spring Match

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

The only surprises in the first round of match play in eight Women's Club championships yesterday occurred at Washington Golf and Country Club where Medalist Mrs. R. N. Sutton and defending champion, Mrs. Wilda Martin, both met defeat.

Mrs. R. E. Howtze eliminated Mrs. Sutton on the final green, 2 up, while Sally Whipple, young golf and tennis star, accounted for Mrs. Martin, 3 and 2.

Other medalists, champions and favorites won as expected.

Marion Brown scored over Mrs. H. J. Simons, 5 and 3, at Manor, after defaulting to Mrs. Betty Meckley in the Indian Spring event. In the semifinal match at the latter club, Mrs. W. R. Stokes defeated Mrs. Charlotte Stern, 6 and 5, and will meet Mrs. Meckley for the title relinquished by Miss Brown at 9:40 this morning.

Mrs. David Clark, after a second straight crown at Army and Navy, won 6 and 5 over Mrs. W. M. Moses, while in the Woodmont play, medalist Mrs. Gil Hahn won by default and Mrs. Henry Goodman was a 6 and 5 victor over Mrs. A. E. Steinem, making a successful start for another title.

Mrs. Myron Davy's 81 was not approached in the second day's medal play at Congressional, with Mrs. C. S. Teal's 98 best of the late starters. Mrs. Davy will meet Mrs. H. H. Moffitt today for the crown vacated by Helen Dettweiler.

Mrs. A. A. McEntee, out to regain a championship she held in 1937, was a 7 and 6 winner over Mrs. J. A. Thurston in the initial round at Kenwood Club.

Columbia's three co-medalists, Mrs. J. F. Gross, Mrs. Norman Frost and Mrs. W. E. Hall, all scored in the first round, but at least one will leave the tournament today as Mrs. Gross and Mrs. Hall are semifinal foes for the title relinquished by Mrs. H. M. Brundage, now a resident of Richmond.

These Untested Youngsters Will Carry Randolph-Macon's Grid Banner

Post Staff Photos—McCoy.

The loss of 13 lettermen through graduation at Randolph-Macon College, Ashland, Va., has put the pressure of the approaching grid season heavily on the shoulders of Coach F. L. Summers, but he promises the school he'll turn out a good football record with the 60-odd inexperienced players on hand. In the photo above, Summers' tentative selection as the starting forward wall is shown in position. Reading the usual way, they are Sawyer, Powell, Miller, Chapell, Peterson, Pugh and Golubic. An important item on the squad's daily drill, calisthenics, is the subject of the lower photo

Nine Sophomores Hold Key To Success of C. U. Squad

Nine sophomores seem to hold the key to Catholic University's hopes for a successful football season and if only four of them come through as expected, Coach Dutch Bergman will be satisfied.

The rookie hopefuls are Joe Brostek, end; Mike Cherello and Jack Shroder, guards; Marty Donovan, Albert Norris and Leon Wowak, backs; Casimir Ksycewski and Jim Nemec, tackles, and Walter Laukaitis, center.

Several of this group already are being touted as regulars. Ksycewski is almost certain of a starting berth at tackle if he continues at his present fast pace and Nemec may start at the other tackle. Cherello and Shroder are waging close fights for guard jobs.

Bergman continued yesterday to devote plenty of time to forward passing. His search for a successor to Burke Vidnovic, his great aerial artist of 1938, is still bearing little fruits and he must develop one before the opener with South Carloina September 29.

Harry Jeffra Promises Fans A Real Fight

Harry Jeffra, Baltimore's contender for the featherweight fight title of the world, yesterday issued from his training quarters in the Century Athletic Club a plea to Washington fight fans that they overlook his sad showing against Baby Yack here when they consider his chances in his title fight with Joey Archibald on September 28 at Griffith Stadium.

"I am in the greatest shape of my career," he said. "And all Baltimore agrees with me when I say I am far superior to Archibald in all phases of fighting."

The slight Baltimorean then explained that he failed to extend himself against Yack for fear of being cut up. The fact that Archibald viewed the scrap from the press bench didn't help him, either. He was, he said, merely saving himself for the match with Archibald, postponed because of the latter's slit eye lid.

"I'm not pulling a Galento. Archibald is no 'bum,' but a pretty fair fighter. But I expect to do to Archibald what Galento did to Nova last week."

boss of the belters. This fact, as well as Pastor's creditable showing here against Roscoe Toles last May, has boomed interest in the bout.

Except for weight, there isn't much to choose between the two punch-tossers physically. Each is 25 years old; Louis is just over 6 feet tall and Pastor barely under that mark; each has a 76-inch reach. So they aren't far apart—if you handcuff Louis.

The fight will be broadcast over a Nation-wide (N. B. C. Blue) radio network.

Mather Scores Tennis Upset; Beats Farrin

Bud Mather, playing some of the best tennis of his career, turned in a startling upset yesterday in the D. C. Recreation Department's fifth annual fall tournament when he ousted Lieut. James Farrin, seeded No. 3, in a quarterfinal singles match, 6—2, 6—3.

With the exception of only a few games, each went to duece before the issue was finally settled, and then it waes Mather's lightning-like baseline drives that gave him victory. His serves, also, kept Farrin continually on the defensive. He was seeded eighth.

In the only other encounter of the day, Hugh Lynch and Davey Johnsen, paired as the No. 1 doubles team, had little difficulty with Hugh Trigg and George Botts. They pounded out a 6—1, 6—4 triumph to enter the semifinals.

Today's matches bring together unseeded Bobby Bensinger, junior D. C. champ, and Alphonso Smith, No. 4, in singles at 4 p. m. The doubles class an hour later features No. 3 team of Tom Mangan and Lieut. Farrin against John and Burt Curran.

Northeast Temple Pin Teams Open Tonight

Soph May Fill Boots of Terps' Injured Center

Jim (Pop) Wharton, 160-pound center, from Baltimore, may be the only sophomore to start for Maryland in its football opener against Hampden-Sydney at College Park September 30.

Wharton, a tall, wiry youngster who has impressed especially on defense, is chief understudy to Bob Smith, injured regular pivot man who may miss the inaugural.

George Geinger, 200-pound first-string guard, also is not certain of playing in the opener, and if he doesn't, John Morton, a junior, will fill his position.

Maryland continued to stress blocking and tackling in a long workout at College Park yesterday. First and second teams went through running plays in a dummy scrimmage.

and discus records, is gaining favor with Hagerty is his hitherto unknown ability to throw a football for amazing distance. More out of curiosity than anything else Hagerty told him Monday to see how far he could throw the ball. With not even so much as a warm-up heave Blozis started sending the pigskin 50, 60 and 70 yards down the field.

"Gosh," said Hagerty after the workout," he can throw that ball further than anyone I ever saw at Georgetown except Mueller who played here quite a few years ago. And that gives me an idea. Mueller used to be pulled back from the line sometimes on fourth down when we were in our own territory and throw the ball as far as he could. Our ends used to race down field and try to catch it. If they did it was usually good for a touchdown and if they didn't the pass would sail over the goal line for a touchback. The ball would then be brought out to the 20-yard line and in that way the long pass was as good as a kick.

"That's what we can do with Blozis. He also could be used in the dying minutes of play if Georgetown was behind and needed a gain of about 50 yards for a touchdown."

War Department Tennis Pairings

Drawings for the second annual tennis tournament of the War Department were completed yesterday, with Capt. Thomas Sherburne seeded No. 1 and Carlton Saunders seeded No. 2. Capt. Sherburne, last year's winner over Maj. Christenberry, is favored to repeat.

All matches will be played on the Potomac Park courts. Pairings follow:

Preliminary round, Jones vs. I. Wice, Swenson vs. Smith. First round, Capt. Thomas Sherburne vs. Peter Tarbay, William Murphy vs. Edmunds, A. Bitonti vs. Jameson, Maj McPike vs. winner of Jones vs. Wice; Carton Saunders vs. Bruce Anderson, John Andary vs. Col. Gillespie, Joe Waicikauskas vs. Albert Lance, Skaggs vs. winner of Swenson and Smith match.

Capt. Eugene Lorenz, of the Pennsylvania Alumni team in the Intercollegiate Bowling League, is seeking two more Penn grads to fill out his quintet. He may be reached at Woodley 0680.

Ghecas Named As Successor To Mellendeck

Hagerty, Hoya Coach, Picks Tentative Line-up for 1st Game

With only ten days remaining before the opening football game with Temple at Philadelphia, Coach Jack Haggerty yesterday named his Georgetown starting lineup.

Of chief importance is the news that Lou Ghecas, who has been flashing great speed in practice, has been named to fill the vacancy at left halfback which was created when Joe Mellendeck gave up the game this year because of a leg injury.

Teamed with Ghecas at halfback is Jules Koshlap, Georgetown's chief passing threat who also is expected to do a lot of kicking and ball carrying. Myron Darmohray gets the fullback job over Jim Castiglia and Frank Meglen by reason of his impressive performance in the last scrimmage, and Joe McFadden is a fixture at quarterback.

First-string ends are Francis (Reds) Daly, a product of Tech High School here and the only local boy on the regular eleven, and Bob Kercher, an All-District choice last year. Joe Daniels, who was shifted from end this year, wins on tackle berth and Earl Fullilove the other. The guards are Mark Ostinato and Augie Ilo, and the center is Al Matuza.

Emphasizingthat the line-up is subject to revision at any time, Hagerty nevertheless seemed pleased at the setup.

"If we can back these boys with a few more capable reserves we will be hard to beat," he predicted. "Not unbeatable," he added cautiously, "but hard to beat."

Fred Jacoby Holds Interest In Boat Races

Champion Ferguson Sees Him as Threat In President's Cup

Interest of fans who line the rail along Georgetown channel this week-end as the powerboat section of the President's Cup Regatta is run will be with Fred Jacoby, runner-up for the amateur outboard championship, as he attempts to overtake the leader.

And struggling to stave off the rush of Jacoby as the end of the boating season nears will be the champion, Clint Ferguson, of Wabash, Mass., whose leading total for the year so far has amounted to 14,015 points. With 3,200 markers to be issued to winners of various heats in the eight events, the championship might easily be settled on the Potomac.

Gold Cup and 135-cubic-inch classes already have become the focal point for speculation. The latter should turn into a dog fight between Andy Crawford and Jack Hyde, of Washington, and Atlantic City's Edison Hedges.

No cancellations have been received in the President's Cup event as yet and this fact is giving Racing Chairman Aubrey Bogley no end of pleasure. He predicts the race will be one of the best in history. Outstanding on the list is the Notre Dame, owned by Herbert Mendelsohn, of Detroit. The other five starters are expected to be My Sin, owned by Zal Simmons, jr.; So Long, owned by L. J. Fageol; Miss Canada III, owned by Harold Wilson; Arctic Turn, owned by E. T. Chase, and Why Worry, owned by W. E. Cantrell.

Son Altesse and Tuleyries Lin Pay $648 Double at 'Graw

17 Split Up 2d Straight Banner Pot

Rex Flag Victor in Westminster Purse Over War Minstrel; Mutuel Only $3.80

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace, Md., Sept. 19.—Daily double stock continued to be a "war baby" here on the south bank of the Susquehanna River and the twin wager soared to $648.90 today, following on the heels of a $619.50 pay-off yesterday. Seventeen lucky investors collected the small fortune in exchange for tickets bearing numbers 10 and 7, representing victories by Son Altesse in the first race and Tuleyries Lin in the second.

It was Tuleyries Lin, owned and operated by C. M. Feltner and generally a half-mile performer, which provided the price punch to the daily double. The Dunlin filly hung up a $93 mutuel after leading eleven others to the wire in a 6-furlong sprint. Son Altesse was a mild $7.80 shot which took the first race in the colors of Ral Parr, Maryland sportsman.

The program was one of both long shot and favorite victories with Rex Flag, an odds-on betting proposition, accounting for the day's feature event, the Westminster Purse. Jockey Johnny Gilbert was unable to pilot the Mrs. Louise Viau star due to a slight illness but Jockey Al Shelhamer proved a worthy substitute. He steadied the Omar Khayam gelding along to the far turn, then sent him to the front, where he galloped off with the verdict, much to the pleasure of his backers, who collected a $3.80 mutuel.

War Minstrel, in the colors of Mrs. Emil Denemark, made several attempts to match speed with Rex Flag but had to be hard driven to save the place money from Sorties Star. Rex Flag won by a comfortable four lengths with some speed in reserve.

Another half-mile star was a winner on the card and provided a $38.90 mutuel. James Pal, ridden by Jockey Mannie Berg, surprised by leading throughout the fourth race. Chance Star and Bounding Count were second and third in the limit field of 12 starters.

Long shots and favorites were equally divided as the seventh race came up. D. J. Sullivan sent two public choices to the post and they both succeeded, Philosopher, at $6, taking the third race and Brandon Prince, at $4.80, scoring in the sixth event.

BROOKE HEROD, well placed from start, came willingly in final stages. DARK MAY was hard used to get to front of WESTCHESTER and weakened in closing test. VICTORY LIGHT closed full of run from sluggish beginning.

BROADWAY JUEL, lacking early speed, came to outside boldly to reach contention, took command over BAR PLAY, but swerved into latter midway of stretch for which he was disqualified. BAR PLAY, closest to pace of WORTHWONNING, saved ground and was coming with good energy along rail when impeded. GRAND DUKE, always close up, weakened gradually in final quarter. Dee Merrill, Jockey, Hurt At Rockingham

Gold Saxon, Forced to Pocket, Stumbles and Seriously Injures Boy

By the Associated Press

Salem, N. H., Sept. 19.—Although unnerved by a serious spill suffered by his older brother, Merrill Packer, young Ogden, Utah, jockey, rode a splendid race on Mrs. E. McCuan's Sweeping Dame while accounting for Rockingham Park's mile and a sixteenth feature race by three-quarters of a length on Lady Roma. The veteran mare traveled the distance in 1:47 2-5 and paid $5.40, $3.40 and $2.40. Lady Roma returned $4.80 and $3.40 and Conrad Mann, which showed in the eight-horse field, returned $3.20.

Two hours before Merrill rode, his 19-year-old brother Dee was seriously injured when thrown by the 2-year-old Gold Saxon in the first race. Dee was making his stretch run when John Hay Whitney's Swans Choice, the ultimate winner, bore out and forced Gold Saxon into a pocket. After the colt stumbled and threw Packer over his head, Watertown, with Jimmy Lynch up, thundered over his prostrate body. Lynch, attempting to avoid the boy, also was thrown and was severely shaken up.

Packer was rushed to the General Hospital in Lawrence, Mass., about 12 miles south of the track. No immediate X-rays were taken but it was feared that the Utah jockey suffered a concussion of the brain.

At The Post

Dear Al:

With the betting ring painted white and featuring red neon signs denoting the denomination of the various tickets, it's almost a pleasure to lose $2 at this track. The paddock betting ring has proven mighty popular with horsemen, paddock gasers and the like. Now that betting can be conducted until the horses break with the tote, the paddock wagering gives the last-minutes a break. In addition, there are more windows than usual in the clubhouse. But despite all the arrangements and the tote, betting here on opening day was only $308,000, or slightly more than $2,000 ahead of the September opening last year. With a $10,000 stake scheduled tomorrow, the betting should go up. It's a pretty fair race, too. Boy Angler, Victory Morn, Arden Lass, Third Covey and other good juveniles clash in the 6-furlong routs. I understand that Sonny Workman may have the mount on Challedon the next time he goes postward, which this track hopes will be Saturday in the Potomac Handicap. Harry Richards, who has been booting Challedon home in stakes, must ride for George D. Widener, who holds his contract and who has Eight-Thirty to send against the season's outstanding 2-year-old. Jockeys Don Meade and Albert Robertson are scheduled to ride here tomorrow. Clocker Mike pops up with a brand-new one; he says he has a tip on a midget auto race in Baltimore.

BILL.

First race—Inviting had a brisk tightener in Monday's race here after showing speed in recent trials at Hawthorne. Drops into a good spot. Great Haste the class, was a sore horse at Pimlico this spring and may not extend himself. Speed Ship won recently with similar company.

Second race—Gossip Time is credited with being a top-notcher; hard luck and stiff competition kept him from the winner's circle in New England, but he is well placed here. Lance Corporal was a fair sort in New York and figures to take down second money. Cenville, an oft-touted good thing, may be close.

Third race—Sun Patty displayed speed in New England and though beaten by True Knightess in her last heat, should reverse that decision with a change of riders. The latter, a consistent performer in the North, is the one to beat. Dewey Dawn was second in a handicap at Hawthorne in poor time. May get a piece of it.

Fourth race—Ariel Toy finished fifth to Sun Egret Monday, beaten two lengths, after receiving slight interference. Will be hard to beat in this small field. Early Morn has been a consistent campaigner in Class C handicaps in New York and looks like the contender. Court Counsel for show.

Fifth race—Victory Morn accounted for the Old Colony Stakes at Narragansett in impressive style. He has been freshened up since the Delaware meeting and will be improving with every start. Boy Angler was third in the Hopeful to Bimelech, which entitles him to the call for the runnerup position. Cardell is speedy, could surprise at a price.

Sixth race—Mamamaid was placed over her head Monday. Recent races with better grade platers in the West indicate she can take the measure of this bunch. Flying Jack, fourth with this type of racers at Narragansett, is rounding to form and will be dangerous. Lottery is a recent sprint winner but may stop.

Seventh race—Some Boy didn't show his true form behind Gyral opening day and has fallen in with cheaper competition in this event. Mahlette was second in his last at Narragansett and looms as the only contender worth consideration. Boscoi, a half-miler, may get up for show.

Best bet—Ariel Toy.

Real Estate Foreclosures Drop in July

5.9% Under June On Other Than Farm Properties

By Thomas M. Cahill.

During July, real estate foreclosures on other than farm properties declined 5.9 per cent from the preceding month and 2.4 per cent from July, 1938, officials of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board announce. Delaware, Pennsylvania and West Virginia, comprising the district of the Federal Home Loan Bank of Pittsburgh, reported an 18.6 per cent decrease from July, 1938, the largest relative drop in number of foreclosures in the 12 Federal home loan bank districts. The Winston-Salem Bank area, including the seven Southeastern States and the District of Columbia, followed with a 17.7 per cent reduction.

Increases were recorded in five districts, the largest, 21.9 per cent, being in the Chicago district of Illinois and Wisconsin. The Portland district, embracing six Pacific Northwest States, was second with 13.9 per cent. Nearly 10 per cent fewer owners lost their properties through foreclosure actions in the first seven months of this year than in the same period of 1938, there being 65,965 in the former and 73,215 cases in the latter period. A January-July rise, averaging 14 per cent, was shown for three districts—Boston, Chicago and Little Rock.

In metropolitan communities the July rate was 5.6 per cent below that in June, slightly under the usual seasonal drop, and nearly 1 per cent under July, 1938. Nevada reported no foreclosures in July as against two in July, 1938. Delaware and West Virginia were next in percentage decreases, with 76.7 and 75.5 per cent, respectively. About 85 per cent of the foreclosures were on individual homes, and 15 per cent on commercial properties and apartment houses. Prepared by the board's division of research and statistics, the survey is based upon official monthly reports from approximately 1,600 communities.

Cox a Speaker

Frederick H. Cox, a vice president of City Bank, Washington, addressed 200 bankers of the Clearing House Association of Page, Shenandoah, Warren, Frederick and Clarke counties at Luray, Monday night on problems pertaining to insurance and bonds for banks. Mr. Cox stated that there is insurance for almost every kind of risk and that the problems are to determine what is wanted and how much. Elements to be considered include number of employes, amount of cash exposed, nature of mechanical protection and audit control.

Mr. Cox was introduced by Arthur J. Lynn, comptroller of Hamilton National Bank, Washington. Houston Newman, Edinburg, presided, and introduced the following visitors from other associations: C. A. Reeblin, Equitable Trust Co., Baltimore; R. T. Vance, W. A. Shumate, J. W. Wright, N. F. Morrison, Waynesboro, Va.; M. O. Muller, Broadway; Joseph F. Morris, Orange; Dorsey Ford and P. W. Bank Women's Convention

Great interest is evidenced by bank women in the seventeenth annual convention of the Association of Bank Women, to be held in Seattle, starting Thursday, just prior to the meeting of the American Bankers' Association. Miss Grace S. Stoemer, Los Angeles, is general convention chairman and the program will stress public relations.

The organization's membership is composed of women holding executive positions in National, State, savings banks and trust companies. Members in Washington include Miss S. Winifred Burwell, assistant trust officer of National Metropolitan Bank; Mrs. Helena D. Reed, assistant trust officer of Lincoln National Bank, and Mrs. V. W. Rhine, cashier of Morris Plan Bank of Washington.

A feature of the meeting will be presentation of the Jean Arnot Reid Award, made annually in honor of one of the founders of the association and its third president, $100 being given to a woman graduate of the American Institute of Banking (not a member of the A. B. A.) selected as best fitted through her work and integrity to represent women in banking.

Manganese Bids, Essential for War, Asked by Treasury

The Treasury asked yesterday for bids on manganese ore, the first "strategic and critical material" on which Congress last session authorized the Army and Navy to stock up.

Under the $100,000,000 appropriation for storing important war substances which must be imported, the Treasury asked American businessmen to quote prices on delivering quantities of manganese ore ranging from 5,000 to 40,000 long tons to Baltimore. The amount to be purchased will not be determined until bids are reviewed.

The Treasury stipulated all bids must be on the basis of new importations or new domestic production, and must not be on delivery of manganese which may now be stored in warehouses in this country. This restriction was intended, officials said, to make sure that manganese purchased would be a "net addition to the Nation's available supply."

The manganese bids will be opened October 19. Bids for other war materials will be asked as soon as specifications are prepared.

Wheat Prices Rally After Hitler Speech

But Closing Reaction Leaves Them ¼ Off to ¾ Up From Monday

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Sept. 19.—The Hitler speech in Danzig, which almost interrupted grain trading during its delivery, caused wide price swings in the wheat pit today.

Prices advanced ¼-⅝ cent soon after the opening, then slumped as much as 2⅝ cents. Immediately after the speech, however, all this loss was wiped out in a strong rally which lifted prices as much as 3⅜ cents from early lows to levels ¾-1¼ cents above yesterday's close.

Just before the final bell another reaction set in and prices were knocked down more than a cent from the day's highs, closing ¼ lower to ¾ higher compared with Monday's finish, December 84⅞-85, May 85 ⅞-86. At the top December was priced at 86¼ compared with a low of 82⅞.

Early selling was attributed to expectations that the speech might contain some hint of possible peace offerings. During its deliverance at mid-day pit operations came almost to a standstill at times while brokers crowded around bulletin boards. When the speech was ended pit brokers said they failed to see any specific peace proposals. The result was a rush to reinstate holdings sold out previously.

Other grains were under selling pressure most of the session, with corn and oats responding only partly to the rally in wheat. Corn closed 1-1¾ lower than yesterday, December 54¾@54⅞, May 57¾; Oats ⅜ to ⅝ down;; Rye ⅛ off to ⅛ up and lard unchanged to 5 lower.

Cotton Prices React to Close Irregular

New York, Sept. 19 (AP).—After attaining net gains of as much as 85 cents a bale, cotton futures today reacted under hedge selling, New Orleans liquidation and profit taking to close 2 points lower to 3 higher.

Best levels were made after Chancellor Hitler's speech. There was some aggressive outside buying and covering on the theory that the address offered no immediate prospect for peace. The flurry of demand was given impetus by a renewed upsurge in securities and a sharp rally in wheat.

Prices Surge Upward with Hitler's War Speech Steels, Motors, Aircrafts Are Chief Gains Corporate Bonds Rise, Foreign Issues Drop

New York, Sept. 19.—The war market recovered vigorously in late trading today when the speech of Adolf Hitler, which it was expected in some quarters would contain at least a suggestion for negotiating a peace settlement, turned out to be as warlike as any of his previous pronouncements. Stocks surged forward after the speech had been digested and business was so packed around the end of the fourth hour that the ticker was 5 minutes late.

Aviations, steels, motors and metals were prominent on the upside, just as they were in the early days of the war market, and rails also were buoyed by favorable domestic reports on their increase in business. The close, judged by the composite average, was up 1.57 points. More trading was done in the last two hours than in the early three hours, the total turnover being 1,832,630.

Listed bonds were irregular today, with most corporate securities higher, foreign dollar bonds sharply lower and United States Treasury issues little changed. Long term Treasury securities were sufficiently weak to make further official buying advisable, but the short maturities were in demand. The foreign section showed a few feeble rallies from recent lows, but most bonds plunged. Speculative issues of the domestic list merely followed the equities market higher. Turnover was $10,010,000, which constitutes a normal day's business.

Steel Shares the Headers

In the stock market gains from 1 to 8 points were well distributed among speculative favorites, Bethlehem featuring with a runup of 8⅛ followed by United States steel, up 6¾. Chrysler added 5, while advances of three to more than four points were scored by Allied Chemical, American Smelting, duPont, Texas, Union Carbide and Westinghouse.

Oils were helped by restriction in Texas, talk of higher crude oil prices and the war news while the equipment shares reflected the new orders being announced by a number of carriers and efforts of the Government to facilitate additional purchases.

While actual war orders are slow in making their appearance in the steel industry, the rush of domestic consumers to stock up as much as possible to avoid being penalized by possibly higher prices in the first quarter of next year has been giving domestic mills a boom. Unofficial estimates place the rate for the industry around 80 per cent of capacity.

While the stock market started with slightly higher prices, there was a period of ease just before Hitler delivered his speech in Danzig. There was a mild peace scare, but for the most part traders did not liquidate; they just sat by to listen to radios and hear what the German leader had to offer. The attitude in the street is that neither side can back away at this stage of the hostilities and that the defeat of Poland will not alter the fundamental issue.

Sterling Is Strong

The foreign exchange market contained as much excitement as did the security markets for a sharp runup in sterling carried the rate to $3.95. It closed at $3.91, up 9¼ cents for the day. Influencing the rebound was Secretary Morgenthau's statement that Washington is disturbed by the double market for sterling in Wall street and that the matter is being studied. It is difficult to see just what the Treasury can do to bring about a higher rate for sterling, but it is apparent it is looking for some method. In any event it is cooperating with the British to bring a halt to speculation in the currency.

The tendency of other markets was to follow the familiar war pattern. United States Government bonds were soft and there were some breaks in foreign dollar obligations. Leading commodities recovered after some hesitancy in early transactions. In the case of wheat, for instance, early losses ranged up to 2¼ cents a bushel, but they were more than eliminated on buying which started with the Hitler speech. Late gains were not fully maintained so that the close was irregular, ¼ cent lower to ¾ cent higher. Cotton futures followed a similar trend, closing up 2 points to off 4 points.

Commodities Gain

Virtually all of the other active commodity futures finished the session on the up side. Cocoa gained 9 to 20 points; rubber was 10 points up to 15 points lower; silk was 1½ cents down to 6 cents higher; copper gained 18 to 24 points; hides gained 43 to 45 points; cottonseed oil was up 15 to 20 points; sugar was unchanged to 5 points higher; coffee gained 10 to 15 points and wool tops were up 5 to 17 points.

Long term Treasury bonds showed losses to ¼ point, with the decline taking place mainly after Hitler's address. Hardly any official buying was noted before 2 o'clock, but thereafter the Federal Reserve took up a modest amount. The long dated guaranteed issues also were soft, but all Treasury obligations with short maturities remained in demand.

In the foreign section Canadian and Australian bonds fell drastically, Canadians declining from fractions to 5 points, while the largest decline in an Australian was 28 points. Estonian 7s dropped 18 points because of fears of Russian experiments. German and Polish bonds resumed their drop to default levels. Italian and Danish bonds rallied slightly, but other European neutral issues were soft. Latin-Americans were idle and mostly lower.

Best-rated utility, railroad and industrial bonds did well in the domestic section, notwithstanding the uneasiness of Treasury securities. Medium-priced rails were in fair demand, and the inquiry also took in borderline and default carrier securities. Holding company issues firmed, and convertibles followed their related equities upward. Local tractions proved a dull group, but most others were better.

Carl J. Bergman Nominated for U.S. Building Board

Carl J. Bergmann, treasurer of the Washington Permanent Building Association, was nominated yesterday by the District of Columbia Building and Loan League as a candidate for the board of directors of the national organization. Bergmann is widely known in the southeastern group of building and loan units for his activity and it is expected that the 11 States in the division will vote almost solidly for his election. He is at present a member of the executive council of the U. S. League. The forty-seventh annual convention of the United States Building and Loan League will get under way September 25 continuing through the 29th at Atlantic City. Local members will send about 50 representatives who will be quartered at the Ambassador.

Arthur C. Bishop presiding at yesterday's meeting announced that the recommendation made by the executive council for a continuance of closing hours followed this past summer had been approved by the league. It will remain, however, the duty of the individual associations to determine if the hours at present would be satisfactory during the winter months.

Before adjourning the local group indorsed the action of the junior officers and employes in organizing a bowling league and promised support. Ten teams from the various associations will participate with the season's opening definitely set for October 2.

New Insurance Policies to Carry War Risk Clause

New York, Sept. 19 (AP).—The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, one of the largest life underwriters in the country, has adopted war-risk regulations for issuance of future policies, affecting mostly foreign-born applicants. Previously the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York announced war risk rules.

Informed insurance authorities said today other companies were studying similar action or had moved toward the same objectives by carefully scrutinizing war risks and making decisions on the individual merits of the applications. The Equitable rules, as well as the Mutual, do not change the status of outstanding policies.

For foreign-born, the society avoids the assumption of risks of the death of the insured within five years for any cause while in service outside the United States of any military or naval force other than that of the United States or on the death of the insured within two years, indirectly or directly from war, while the insured is outside the United States and not in military services. Under these circumstances, the liability is limited to repayment of premiums and dividends.

Another clause, applicable to all persons, voids any risk of death within two years directly or indirectly as result of war while the insured is outside the continental United States.

Railroads Set To Handle Any Traffic Bulge

Rolling Stock Less But Efficiency Greater, Association Says

The member lines of the Association of American Railroads, meeting in Washington yesterday approved the following statement:

"There will be adquate railroad transportation in the United States for any increased business now in prospect. To insure that this will be the case, the railroads are agreed upon a policy of putting into repair their cars and engines which have not been needed to handle current business. In addition, as traffic and earnings may justify it, additional equipment will be ready to meet demands which may develop.

"The railroads are putting themselves in readiness in advance of demand. They do this in spite of the fact that of late years traffic has not required, and earnings have not been sufficient to permit, them to keep all facilities in immediately serviceable shape. As they did in 1923, however, railroads have determined to spend money which they have not earned in order that they may meet a public need, on the faith that there will be hereafter a square deal in public transportation policies.

"The railroads enter upon this program with full knowledge that there are fewer freight cars and engines in the United States than there were in the past years. Present-day equipment, however, has more capacity and greater efficiency than the larger number of units in which the business was handled twenty years ago.

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

JOBS: The Civil Service Commission announces open competitive examinations for statistician, $3,800, principal, $5,600, senior, $4,600, associate $3,200 and assistant, $2,600, various optional subjects. College education and professional experience in technical statistical work are required. Examinations will be held also for the position of transportation economist at $3,800; also principal $5,600; senior, $4,600; associate, $3,200; assistant, $2,600, various optional fields. Employment is in the Agriculture Department, Civil Aeronautics Authority, Federal Works Agency, Interstate Commerce Commission, or the U. S. Maritime Commission. Except for certain substitutions, applicants must have completed a four-year college course, and must have had responsible experience of a technical character, including research in the fields of transportation.

IT'S CURIOUS how the Government has been so indifferent as to where the Agriculture Department Graduate School places its worthwhile and important academic house. This school at the very moment is casting about in search of rooms to hold its classes—classes that will attract to Wahington many internationally known educators.

The classes have always been held in any cubby-hole that the school authorities could find or beg.

The Government is quick enough to find a volley ball court, or a horse-shoe pitching field or ping-pong quarters for all and sundry—but it apparently can't assure or provide space for something so worthwhile as the Agriculture Graduate School. It doesn't make sense.

Says a communication: Increases in disability allowances for men discharged from the Regular Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, authorized under the new law, Public 257, up to 75 per cent of war time rates or $75 amonth, are being rapidly adjusted by the Veterans Administration. Inquiries with reference to the adjustments and other claims of disabled Regulars may be referred to the Regular Veterans Association's national headquarters at 1115 Fifteenth street northwest, which is recognized by the V. A. to handle these claims, it was stated.

This law was covered in the bill S. 522 introduced by Senator Schwartz and was sponsored by the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Regular Veterans Association and will affect 27,000 disabled regulars, it was added. LeRoy P. Chittenden, educational director of the R. V. A., says that his association will sponsor and fight for an increase in allowances for dependents of deceased regulars to equal those paid dependents of war veterans.

THE AGRICULTURE Department Graduate School is being urged to offer a course in navy architectural drafting, the group possibly seeing a good field of employment . . . The Patent Office announces a lecture by Stanley Brandenburg on "The Development of the Lathe," the talk, illustrated, to be given in the Commerce Auditorium at 3 p. m. tomorrow. The speech will cover a period beginning at 560 B. C. . . . The Library of Congress this week extended a welcome to a number of the officers, prominent members and foreign guests of the International Congress of the American Musicological Society, which was in session in New York last week. Mrs. Gertrude Clarke Whittall, who attended the congress, extended her hospitality to the visitors by entertaining them at a luncheon at the Shoreham Hotel . . . The Civil Service Commission's statement on the condition of the apportionment as of September 15 shows in excess Vermont, Utah, Montana, Kansas, Rhode Island, North and South Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Virginia, Maryland and the District of Columbia . . . After its annual convention, the American Federation of Government Employes takes a look toward the future it is entering, naming some of the hazard-points, as follows:

"There are serious problems ahead. The war in Europe will undoubtedly make its effect felts on this side of the water, and the longer it continues the more serious they are likely to be. Then there is the troublesome fiscal question, particularly the matter of the Government debt limit. This has a direct and obvious bearing on the welfare of Government workers, and must be recognized as a question of vital import. At the moment it seems at least possible that a solution for the fiscal problem may come about through the present revival of business activity, and if so the worries of Government employes will be correspondingly reduced. Any such possibility, however, is highly speculative."

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Few bridge players ask enough questions. Fearful of appearing ridiculous and earning the laughter of their friends, they remain silent when some point escapes their understanding. Then they make the error all over again.

If we were not so afraid of being wrong or "shown up," or if experienced players were more sympathetic and tolerant, it would be easier for beginners to become proficient.

Many give up too soon or turn against the game, bitter and even jealous of those who play it well. It takes courage to admit a wrong; it takes grit to admit ignorance and invite criticism. But it is the speediest way to learn, and thus earn the respect of others.

Sometimes the most unorthodox bidding wins big rewards. Take the hand in today's box, played by George W. Paratt, of Cleveland, and W. Howard Woolworth, Buffalo expert. Gambling on his partner's ability to take care of the opponents' spade suit, Paratt jumped to three no trump without once showing his seven hearts which he was relying heavily upon for tricks. The adversaries doubled; Paratt stuck to his decision; and top score—900 points—rolled in to the bidders.

In the play, East opened the spade queen; dummy's ace won. Paratt ran seven hearts and the ace of diamonds to complete his quota of nine tricks.

ADRIANA

By George Dyer

A Story of Love and Intrigue in Vineyard Sound

Chapter 27

THE PROMOTER struggled up the already sloping floor of the cabin towards us, bawling to Big Jack to help him with the lifeboat. When he was between Adriana and me I held out my arm and stopped him.

"At least open the girl's belt," I said, "and give her a chance for her life."

Mr. Raskin removed the obstruction by kicking me in the sprained wrist.

"You two can stay where you are," he said, "and drown like rats in a trap. And afterwards you can damn' well rot." And he hauled himself up the companionway steps.

Big Jack had been waiting for his employer to clear the entrance, and he now moved to follow him. But as he scrambled up the floor, he drew his knife, and advanced on Adriana with a tight smile on his bitter mahogany face. The girl shut her eyes.

This was the moment when, if it had all been a dream, I should have awakened sweating and screaming, and fallen out of bed. As it was, instead, by some height of effort that I never could reach again, I burst the seatbelt which had held me helpless so long.

The utterly unexpected release caught me off balance, and I went sprawling forward to smash against the obstacle detector panel in the front wall. I found my feet immediately, and turned to fling myself on the Indian, but it was too late. Big Jack was doing what he wanted to as I turned.

I saw Adriana pressed against the back of her seat, with wide eyes and a look of horrified surprise on her face. The Indian was bending over her, and his naked blade was at work.

I shouted, I guess. The knife fell, and in one swift stroke cut the webbing of the girl's safety belt as if it had been paper. Then the Indian sheathed his weapon and jumped to the steps.

"Life preservers under the seats," he said, swinging in the doorway. "Keep away from our boat. The boss will kill you. I won't see you again, but don't think Big Jack's all mean, like him. Good-by."

He disappeared to the deck. I went to Adriana, and as we stood holding on to each other dazedly the cabin lights went out.

"Did he know that course would take us into the Devils Bridge?" she said, in a shaking voice.

I realized that the first gray light of dawn was leaking down the sinking companionway.

IT WAS THE Freda K. cruising off Menemsha Bight under orders of Eben Bronson (who had been sure all along that the Mark X would come back to base), that picked us up.

All four men, and the dog, heard Mr. Raskin's speedboat approaching, and heard it crash, and turned at once for the sound even before they could see anything.

The noise of the wreck was audible for about ten miles, and brought out not only the Gay Head surfboat, but the one from the Cuttyhunk Coast Guard station as well. These two headed for the uptilted stern of the shattered speedboat, and were standing by when the hull finally vanished to its grave among the hungry sunken boulders of the Devils Bridge. But it was the fisherman who got to us first.

We had been in the water over half an hour when Sig. Hansen at the Freda K.'s masthead yelled, and The MacGlashan of Rannoch on the foredeck barked, both together, and they turned for the spot where we were drifting.

I was getting terrified for Adriana. She was completely spent and barely conscious as she floated in the crook of my left arm. Fortunately the sea, by some temporary agreement between wind and tide, was not rough, and the tide was setting northward along the Vineyard shore. I was able by kicking to keep us both clear of the foaming wash over the scattered rocks of the reef until we were carried into deep water. The girl's lifebelt helped me to hold her head above the water. But I couldn't keep her warm.

Capt. Matt and Eben Bronson pulled her over the rail of the Freda K. while Sig and Arne gave me their strong hard hands. As I saw bending over us the anxious, red, ever-so-honest-and-good faces of the three fishermen, and the ruddy countenance and white beard of the old artist, and the hairy grinning mask of The MacGlashan, I woke at last, once and for all, from the nightmare in which I seemed to have been imprisoned for years.

THEY HUSTLED us down into the deliciously stuffy cabin, where a coal fire burned in the laundry stove that served the fishing boat as cooking and heating plant. A sooty pot of coffee, smelling good beyond words, simmered upon it.

I began all of a sudden to feel grand and hungry and scarcely even tired. My wrist was swollen, of course, but the cold water seemed to have reduced it some, and I knew that with a little strapping it would be nearly as good as new. Anyway, I certainly felt well enough to take care of my girl.

Therefore I shooed every one but The Macglashan out of the cabin and peeled off Adriana's dripping cold clothing (the poor kid was mottled blue and purple from head to foot) and rubbed her dry with the two flour sacks that were the Freda K.'s dish towels, and wrapped her to the chin in blankets. Then I lifted her upon one of the rough wooden bunks, and began to put a thick white china mug full of coffee, sugar and condensed milk into her as fast as she could swallow it.

During this process The MacGlashan, of Rannock sat on the floor and looked from his mistress to me and back again, and if ever a dog laughed with delight, the great greyhound laughed with delight then.

I could feel the boat beginning to plough ahead, and Bronson came down into the cabin with a serious expression in his sharp blue eyes.

"Raskin and a companion have landed on the shore about a half mile east of Gay Head," he said. "I picked them up with the galsses ju t as they crossed the beach. They abandoned their boat and disappeared into the scrub growth inland. We're standing inshore now."

He scanned Adriana critically. The girl's teeth had almost stopped chattering and her lips were beginning to lose that terrible leaden color. She smiled at Bronson.

"We mustn't let him escape, at any cost," went on the artist. "Can your dog follow the scent of a man, Miss Blake?"

"I think he would for me," said Adriana, none too strongly yet.

THE SUIT THAT PAYS FOR ITSELF

EXTRA TROUSERS! You know, from actual experience, that a coat will outwear a pair of trousers. You must have in your own wardrobe, jackets that look like new, yet the trousers are shiny and frayed, suitable only for gardening and puttering around the car. This means that with the extra pair of trousers you get an additional 2/5 wear of another suit. And the second pair of pressed trousers ready for any emergency.

FEWER PRESSINGS! SHINE RESISTANT! Next, the suit is made of a specially selected worsted that is woven in a "Cable Twist." This unusual weaving makes the suit hold its shape longer and need fewer pressings. Also the exclusive "Cable Twist" is so woven that Shiny Seat, the nemesis of all trousers, is gone with the wind. You save on tailor bills and wear the suit longer because of its shine-resistant feature.

By the House of Worsted-Tex

in the famous British Lounge and conventional models

WITHOUT benefit of calculus and logarithms, it's quite evident, as mentioned above, that the suit pays for itself.

IS it any wonder that you get the wear of 2 Suits? Is it any wonder that after a year, when a normal suit is on the wane, this Wearlong Worsted Two-Trouser Suit just gets its "second wind" and breezes right on through its second year? Is it any wonder? Frankly, at $35, it is! We used to sell this same suit at $35 with only one pair of trousers. Now, for the first time, $35 with 2 Pairs of Trousers.

KEEP these savings in back of your mind for a moment. Take into consideration that this Wearlong Worsted suit is an established product of the famous House of Worsted-tex, one of America's best known clothing makers. They have tailored this garment into the increasingly popular British Lounge model, the model that will do wonders with your figure. The slightly wider shoulders, fuller chest and tapering hips and waistline create an athletic build and an illusion of greater height. These features are "needled-in," not pressed-in.

NOW bring back the savings. Add them to the Two-Trouser feature, shine-resistance, fewer pressings, workmanship and styling and you have a suit that we'll stand in back of like the Treasury stands back of your dollar.
